District Tops U. S. Cities in Aggravated Assault Cases

Repeats Standing For Second Year; Barrett Stresses Population Growth

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

For the second year in a row, Washington in 1949 led the Nation's cities in the number of aggravated assault cases, the Federal Bureau of Investigation reported yesterday.

The forthcoming 1950 census is expected to rank the national capital as either the ninth or eighth largest city in the United States. Figures for New York were not complete and hence not included in the FBI report. With New York out, Washington ranked:

First in aggravated assaults;
Eighth in murders;
Sixth in burglaries;
Seventh in larcenies over $50;
Sixth in larcenies under $50;
Eighth in robberies;

Tops N. Y. In Burglaries

In 1948, for which New York figures were available, Washington had half again as many assaults as the Nation's biggest city. Hence there is little doubt Washington in 1949 again had more assault cases than any other city in America. Washington in 1948 also topped New York in burglaries and total larcenies and presumably did so again in 1949.

Here is the actual number of cases in each category, as reported to the FBI by the Metropolitan Police for Washington:

Robberies: 688 (compared to 1023 in 1948);
Aggravated assaults: 4314 (compared to 4049);
Burglaries: 4151 (compared to 4543);
Larcenies over $50: 1977 (compared to 1993);
Larcenies under $50: 8490 (compared to 9294);
Auto thefts: 1172 (compared to 1438).

The biggest change between 1948 and 1949 was in the number of robberies reported, a drop of close to 33 percent.

Aggravated Assault

An aggravated asault is defined as including "assault with intent to kill; assault by shooting, cutting, stabbing, maiming, poisoning, scalding, or by the use of acids." It does not include "simple assault, assault and battery and attempt to rob."

The FBI publication, known as the "Uniform Crime Reports for the United States and its Possessions," said the volume of crime and crime rates between individual cities should not be compared. A major reason is that the 1940 population figures on which the studies are based are now out of date in practically every case. Another is that the figures are submitted by police chiefs and the FBI does not vouch for their accuracy.

Superintendent of Police Robert J. Barrett, asked for comment on the FBI report, contended it did not present a fair picture of local crime.

Barrett said that while the fig-

Boa Constrictor's 30 Babies Amaze Pet Shop Monkeys

Tampa, Fla., March 20 (AP).—An eight-foot boa constrictor gave birth to 30 wriggling snakes at a pet shop last night to the amazement of monkeys inside and spectator outside the store.

The mother had just arrived the day before from South America for delivery to a snake collector.

The proprietor, James M. Coker, said it was the first time he had heard of a boa constrictor having young in captivity.

Budget Chief Indorses Proposal Now Before House Committee

REP. ENGEL — Asks a question
PACE — Budget Director

By Jerry Kluttz
Post Reporter

The Administration has indorsed a plan to restrict the accumulation of annual leave by Federal workers, it was learned yesterday.

Budget Director Frank Pace, who speaks for the President on such matters, gave his blessings to the proposal to hold down accumulated annual leave that is being debated by members of the House Appropriations Committee.

Under the plan, employes would have to take annual leave as they earn it or else lose it. They wouldn't be allowed to accumulate more annual leaves than they have now.

Pace did suggest to the committee that the matter be handled by administrative action—by orders given employes from their top bosses—rather than by law.

The Senate started the ball rolling toward restricting annual leave when it voted several weeks ago to require the 5000 employes in the Office of the Housing Expediter to take annual leave this year as they earned it or else lose it. Members of the House Appropriations Committee immediately picked up the issue.

In hearing testimony released yesterday, Representative Engel

Congressmen to Play Santa With 3000 Cookbooks Each

Congress is playing Santa Claus this week with one of its biggest give-away sprees in recent years—that is, next to its price-support programs.

Each member has been given 3000 copies of a newly prepared, Government-printed cookbook for free distribution. The book was prepared for this election year by experts hired by the Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics of the Agriculture Department on order of Congress.

Congress gave the Bureau $10,000 to prepare the book. It voted $156,000 more to print it at the Government Printing Office. That is expected to pay part of the cost. Some will come from direct sales by GPO to customers who don't rate high enough to get one free from their Congressmen. GPO will charge 25 cents for the book, said to represent actual cost.

This week's mailing is only half. A movement is under way to repeat the order in the next fiscal year—which starts July 1. This will give Congressmen a mailing before the primary elections and another before the fall elections.

Agriculture Department officials have been warned against publicity. One member of the House Agriculture Committee said he'd get so many requests for copies from women voters in his district he'd go broke buying them.

Every year each member of the House gets 400 copies of the Agriculture Year Book ($2 a copy), and each Senator gets 550. In addition they get thousands of copies annually of Infant Care—a book about babies—from the Children's Bureau, and other publications.

The 1949 Yearbook was called Trees. It proved so popular Congress wanted it reprinted this year. The annual cost of the Yearbook is $243,000. By reprinting Trees a

Prince Georges Bill Validity Is Questioned

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

The Sothoron bill to reorganize the Prince Georges County government may not be constitutional.

This was the opinion expressed last night by Maryland's Attorney General Hall Hammond, who sent the Sothoron bill and 33 others he considers legally doubtful to Gov. W. Preston Lane after screening them. The bills were passed at the recent session of the Maryland General Assembly.

Under the law authorizing the 1950 short session of the legislature, bills, to be constitutional, had to concern fiscal matters, affect the general public welfare, or be of an acute emergency nature. The Sothoron bill was passed under the emergency provision, but Hammond indicated he thought it went beyond this category to change the county government generally.

The Sothoron bill, Hammond said, "purports to improve the local government of Prince Georges County by prescribing the number of county commissioners, their terms of office, their powers and their compensation."

Its sponsor, Senator L. Harold Sothoron, claimed that it was an emergency bill because it sought to correct an error in a 1949 amendment to the local code, when the number of commissioners to be elected was inadvertently omitted.

Hammond contended yesterday that the bill is not confined to this "emergency," however, but would make other changes in the local setup.

If Governor Lane should veto the bill, the conduct of the November elections in Prince Georges County would become a legal question.

Jerrold V. Powers, counsel to the Prince Georges County Commissioners, who helped Sothoron draft the measure, last night said he had "serious doubts" that the commissioners' election could be held as scheduled if the bill was vetoed.

Terms of all five incumbent commissioners expire the first Tuesday in next December.

1200 Korean Reds Riot in Tokyo; 108 Police Injured

Tokyo, March 20 (U.P.).—Japanese police clashed with 1200 Koreans in Tokyo's worst riot in years today when police sealed the headquarters of the outlawed Communist-led Korean League. Police said 108 of their men and many Koreans were injured.

The government, backed by United States occupation officials, banned the league last year, charging it incited unrest. But its leaders refused to quit their headquarters.

Farmers Fail To Cut Crops As U. S. Asks

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

American farmers apparently plan to disregard the Government's request for smaller crops of price-supported commodities this year, the Crop Reporting Board announced yesterday.

Crop experts last night were freely predicting another huge potato surplus, as well as additions to the present oversupplies of many grains, particularly feed crops.

The Government asked that potato farmers reduce their acreage 7 percent. Instead, the cut will amount to only 3.2 percent, the board estimated. This may bring an even larger crop than in 1949. The 1949 crop is expected to cost the Government about 100 million dollars when it is all sold. In five years potatoes have cost half a billion.

The Government asked farmers to cut corn acreage by 12.9 percent. The cut is expected to be less than half, or about 5.9 percent.

Other Requests and Results

A request for a cut in peanuts of 19 percent will bring a cut of only 12.3 percent. The Government asked that dry beans be cut 20 percent; the farmers are cutting only 11.7 percent. A request for a cut of 13.7 percent for rice is bringing a cut of only 10.5 percent.

Wheat is the only supported crop not under strict Government-enforced marketing rules that met Uncle Sam's requests.

The total 72 million acres for spring and winter wheat "is very slightly below the national allotment," the board said.

In spite of the failure of growers of many crops to meet Government requests, the total cut in these crops will be large. There are declines in all the crops for which acreage allotments will be in effect. They are large in corn and spring wheat, but small for peanuts, beans, rice, potatoes and tobacco. There are also drops in flax and dry peas.

Other Plantings Increased

"But more than offsetting these declines," the report states, "are intended increases in oats, barley, soybeans, hay, sugar beets, sweet potatoes and cowpeas." Many of these also have been price-protected. Pressure will undoubtedly be made to continue such "discretionary" supports.

The total spring plantings, in the face of the Government request for sharp cuts, will amount in 17 crops, including hay, to 277.9 million acres, compared with only 274.2 million last year.

The Government has rigid controls over planting of cotton, peanuts and tobacco. All are under marketing quotas—a device that not only limits the acres, but also the amount that may be sold from those acres.

The Senate is expected to vote today on a House-passed measure that would increase acreages for both cotton and peanuts. A vote yesterday was postponed owing to the illness of Chairman Elmer Thomas of the Senate Agriculture Committee. Last night many Senators predicted that the bill, vigorously opposed by Senator Clinton P. Anderson, former Secretary of Agriculture, will be defeated. It would add between 50 and 100 million dollars to the Government price-support costs this year.

ECA Is Cut Billion, Given CCC Credit

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

The House Foreign Affairs Committee voted yesterday to cut a billion dollars from third-year Marshall Plan funds and to give western Europe up to a billion dollars' worth of farm surpluses instead.

At first glance the committee's action looked like (1) a slash of more than a third in the funds sought for the Marshall Plan and (2) a renewed attempt to force unwanted farm surpluses on western Europe.

Actually, it was little more than a bookkeeping change which, officials said, would not save the taxpayer a nickel. The Economic Cooperation Administration already plans to send far more than a billion dollars' worth of grain, cotton, tobacco and other surplus commodities to Europe in its next year's program.

Would Have to Buy From CCC

If the House and Senate approve the proposed change, it will mean that the ECA will have to get up to a billion dollars' worth of these supplies from the Commodity Credit Corporation instead of going into the open market for a large part of them.

The committee also voted to set aside 600 million dollars of the third-year funds for a European Payments Union, so that the Marshall Plan countries can buy one another's goods more easily than now.

Paul Hoffman, the ECA administrator, asked Congress to let him use up this amount for a Payments Union. The House committee not only agreed to his request, but made it mandatory to use the 600 million for this purpose.

Otherwise the committee left Hoffman's third-year request intact, and by decisive votes beat down two attempts to cut the authorized funds. One of the proposed cuts would have wiped out the 149 million dollars left over from this year's ECA operations; the other would have slashed the authorization by 450 million.

Hopes to Finish Today

The committee hopes to finish work on the ECA authorization today, even if it requires a night session. Chairman John Kee (D., W. Va.) told reporters he expected to report a single-package bill later in the week authorizing funds for ECA, the Point Four technical assistance program and the relief of Arab refugees.

The amendment on farm surpluses was the work of Representative John M. Vorys (R., Ohio), and passed the committee by a 10-to-7 vote which, according to Chairman Kee, cut across party lines. Kee himself opposed it strenuously.

It provided that such surpluses should be farm products "owned or hereafter acquired by the Commodity Credit Corporation in the administration of its price support programs." The goods would be valued at their actual gross cost to the CCC, but not higher than the domestic market price at the time and place of delivery.

The only exception would be farm supplies furnished under the terms of international commodity agreements. The surpluses provided under the amendment would have to come from the United States, but ECA would not be compelled to send any particular

Protesting Security Measures

North Italy's Industrial Cities Crippled by Strikes, Violence

Rome, March 20 (AP).—Communist-led workers crippled Italy's big northern industrial cities today with strikes and violence. It was a protest against government measures to quell just such disorders.

Temporary strikes hit Milan, Genoa, Bologna, Modena, Pisa, Florence and Terni. In Rome, riot forces were ordered on 24-hour duty.

As police mobilized their forces during a lull in the demonstrations, most workers went back to their benches on orders of Communist-controlled chambers of labor which said further action would be decided by the General Confederation of Labor.

This action may come Tuesday. The executive committee of the CGIL postponed until then decision on a reported plan for a Nation-wide general strike and a proposal for a great protest demonstration throughout the country.

Premier Alcide de Gasperi's cabinet, harrassed by mounting unrest, decided Sunday to increase the police and authorized prefects to ban rallies and demonstrations wherever they thought it necessary. The government ordered the police increased to the April, 1948, election strength, estimated by leftists at 200,000.

Communists had attacked the new Government measures as "Fascist-type extraordinary legislation" and warned of "grave civil strife" ahead.

The strife came today in the industrial north, when Communist-led workers staged sudden strikes and demonstrations. Factories were closed and traffic snarled in Genoa, Milan, Florence and Bologna.

Street fighting broke out in Pisa when pro-Communist students hoisted a "peace" flag on a war memorial and pro-Fascists pulled it down.

Milan demonstrators attacked an Associated Press photographer, James Pringle, punched him in the face and broke his camera. They also confiscated the film pack of an Italian photographer assisting Pringle.

Chinese Reds Bar U. S. Ships From Evacuation at Shanghai

By the United Press

Evacuation of 2000 Americans and other foreigners from Shanghai was blocked yesterday by refusal of Chinese Communists to let two United States rescue vessels enter the port.

The State Department said the Communists apparently feared the rescue craft, two LSTs, were warships rather than commercial boats. It instructed diplomats in Shanghai to press the Communist authorities to reconsider their decision.

The unexpected impasse delayed the scheduled sailing of the American President Lines steamer General Gordon from Hongkong to pick up the refugees and bring them home.

The LSTs, converted war craft now operated as commercial boats by the American President Lines, were en route from Yokohama to Shanghai when the department received word that they would not be allowed to enter the port.

The two shallow-draft vessels had been dispatched to pick up the refugees and shuttle them to the President Gordon, which planned to anchor well outside Shanghai off the mouth of the Yangtze River.

The President Gordon cannot enter the port because the main channel has been mined by Chinese Nationalists as part of their blockade of the Communist-held mainland.

The Chinese Nationalists, who have fired upon some American vessels attempting to run their blockade, have promised they will not interfere with the evacuation operations.

Eight Workers Hurt In XC-99 Plane Blast

San Antonio, Tex., March 20 (AP).—An explosion ripped out a wing fuel cell of the XC-99, world's largest military land airplane, and injured eight workers at Kelly Air Force Base today.

Firemen from two trucks standing by kept damage to a minimum.

There were 41 technicians aboard the aerial giant, only plane of its kind in the Air Force, when the explosion ripped out the fuel cell and tore loose the inboard bulkhead.

Jessup Lashes Sharply At McCarthy; Truman Backs Acheson Fully

President Says State Dept. Is Run 'Admirably'; Blasts Rumors of Ouster

Key West, Fla., March 20 (AP).—President Truman demonstrated his full support of Secretary of State Acheson today with the declaration that he is running the State Department "admirably" and will stay on the job there.

A top White House source disclosed the President is considering giving Senate Communist spy investigators limited access to loyalty files to help clear accused members of the State Department.

Acheson has been under fire from Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.), whose complaints of Communist links in the State Department precipitated an investigation by a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee.

He also was bombarded with criticism recently in connection with failure to aid the Chiang Kai-shek government of China.

Annoyed by Rumors

Annoyed by published and broadcast rumors that Chief Justice Vinson, a visitor at Mr. Truman's "Winter White House," might replace Acheson, the President blasted the reports through Presidential Secretary Charles G. Ross.

"Rumors have been brought to the President's attention that the visit of the Chief Justice here has some connection with the post of Secretary of State," Ross said at a news conference.

"Those rumors are completely without foundation.

"No change in the head of the State Department is contemplated. All rumors to the contrary are complete fabrications. The Chief Justice's visit here is completely social."

Then, looking up at the newsmen to give this statement emphasis, Ross went on:

"The President has complete confidence in the Secretary of State and believes he is running the department admirably."

Charges By McCarthy

Mr. Truman acted after Senator McCarthy said the country would be better off if Acheson resigned.

"I think the situation would be infinitely improved if not only Acheson, but the whole ring of 'untouchables' (in the State Department) were out," the Senator declared.

After Ross' announcement, another top White House source disclosed that Mr. Truman, in the interest of "clearing inocent men," may grant Chairman Tydings (D., Md.) and other members of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee investigating McCarthy's

FBI Gets Charge That Lewis Kept Miners From Pits

By the United Press

A "thorough" FBI investigation has been ordered into an Illinois miner's charge that John L. Lewis used a secret set of signals to keep miners out of the pits in the recent coal strike, Assistant Attorney General H. Graham Morison revealed last night.

He said the investigation began Saturday after published reports quoted Lloyd H. Sidener, ousted president of a United Mine Workers local in Canton, Ill., as saying Lewis ducked a contempt of court penalty by publicly ordering miners back to work but countermanding the order with the signals.

Assails 'Disregard' For Nation in Red Link Charge; Hints Political Purposes

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

Ambassador-at-Large Philip C. Jessup yesterday lashed back at Senator McCarthy's (R., Wis.) "utterly irresponsible charges" against him, and implied they were issued for partisan political purposes.

Publication of the charges revealed on McCarthy's part, Jessup told a Senate subcommittee, "a shocking disregard for the interests of our country."

They had the effect of undermining American foreign policy and injuring his own recent work in a world-wide series of diplomatic conferences, Jessup said.

Last week McCarthy alluded to Jessup's "unusual affinity for Communist causes" in the course of presenting charges against other State Department officials. Jessup at once flew back to Washington from talks he was conducting in Europe, to answer the charges yesterday before the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee.

Makes Inclusive Denial

Jessup made a flat, categorical and inclusive denial of the charges against him and said his record "does not offer the slightest iota of proof" of McCarthy's allegation.

When he finished his statement, Chairman Tydings (D., Md.) of the subcommittee read two letters received from Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, now president of Columbia University, and from the former Secretary of State, Gen. George C. Marshall.

Both attested to Jessup's loyalty in glowing terms and denied the imputation of pro-Communist leanings.

The nature of the attack on him, Jessup declared, was "obviously intended to give the impression that I am disloyal to the United States." Though McCarthy did not use the words, he continued, his insinuations were such as to hold an American ambassador-at-large before the eyes of the world as a "liar and traitor".

McCarthy was present at yesterday's hearings, but was not allowed by Senator Tydings to interrogate Jessup.

Contrary to the tradition of the Bill of Rights, Tydings explained, Jessup was not able to confront McCarthy, his accuser, when the

Gubitchev Off For Homeland Aboard Batory

New York, March 20 (AP).—Valentin A. Gubitchev went back to Russia today with a hug and a kiss from his wife and a lukewarm good luck wish for the "other woman," Judith Coplon.

The Russian engineer-diplomat, convicted with Miss Coplon of plotting to spy for the Soviet Union, was put aboard the Polish liner Batory by a small army of Federal and city police and kept under guard until the ship was well out of New York harbor.

By going home "never to return" the 33-year-old Gubitchev escaped a 15-year prison sentence. What he might be letting himself in for—a hero's welcome? disgrace as a bungler who got caught?—no one this side of the Iron Curtain could say.

Whisked to Pier

Handcuffed, Gubitchev was whisked to the pier after Federal Judge Sylvester J. Ryan suspended the prison sentence on condition that he leave this country at once. Six motorcycle policemen, sirens wide open, escorted the prison van and seven escort cars.

Aboard the Batory, dark, vivacious Lydia Gubitchev waited in their cabin. He hugged and kissed her as soon as his manacles were removed. Mrs. Gubitchev said she was very glad they're going home together.

Miss Coplon stayed behind, free in $60,000 bail, facing up to 25 years in prison if her appeals are turned down.

The former Government girl and Gubitchev contended throughout their trial that they were in love, and not conspiring to spy, when they held furtive meetings in out-of-the-way places.

Asked About Message

Today, before he was put aboard the ship, the Russian was asked if he had any last message for Miss Coplon.

Gubitchev shrugged.

"Do you wish her luck?" a reporter asked.

"Yes, luck," the Russian said. His usually impassive face broke into a smile. "I wish her luck," he said, and turned away.

Gubitchev was sent home rather than to prison on the recommendation of Secretary of State Dean Acheson, who warned of possible Russian reprisals against American officials in eastern Europe.

Text of Letters Backing Jessup On 'Red' Charge

Below are the texts of the letters to Ambassador Philip C. Jessup that were read yesterday in his reply to charges made against him by Senator McCarthy (R., Wisc.):

From General Marshall

My dear Jessup:

I am shocked and distressed by the attack on your integrity as a public servant.

Throughout your intimate service with me while I was Secretary of State you were clearly outstanding as a representative of the Government both as to your masterful presentations and the firmness of your opposition to all Soviet or Communist attacks or pressures. This was conspicuously the case during your handling on the Security Council of the Berlin blockade issue.

Both the Undersecretary, Mr. Lovett, and I counted you as a great source of strength to the State Department during those critical days.

Faithfully yours,
G. C. MARSHALL.

From General Eisenhower

March 18, 1950.

My dear Jessup:

I am writing to tell you how much your university deplores the association of your name with the current loyalty investigation in the United States Senate.

Your long and distinguished record as a scholar and a public servant has won for you the respect of your colleagues and of the American people as well. No one who has known you can for a moment question the depth or sincerity of your devotion to the principles of Americanism. Your university associates and I are confident that any impression to the contrary will be quickly dispelled as the facts become known.

Sincerely,
DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

Warships of 'Radical Design' Asked in Program by Vinson

Post Reporter

Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee yesterday presented legislation to modernize the Navy with new and converted warships of "radical design."

As a starter, he proposed a building program calling for the construction of 50,000 tons of new vessels and the conversion of 200,000 tons of existing ships at a cost of 500 million dollars.

Vinson said he had worked out the legislation with Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, chief of naval operations, and that the building plan has been tentatively approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"I feel confident that it will have the approval of the Secretary of Defense and the Budget Bureau," he declared.

Emphasis in the program is one means of combating the new type "snorkel" submarines that Russia is reported building in large quantities. No aircraft carriers or "super-sized ships" are provided in the new construction, Vinson said.

Meanwhile, Admiral Sherman told the Senate Appropriations Committee that the Navy "urgently" needs new types of ships and weapons. He testified that funds will be sought in next year's (fiscal 1952) budget for a new shipbuilding program, emphasizing antisubmarine warfare and air defense.

There are no funds for new ship

'Cold' Drug Claims Draw FTC Charges

By the United Press

Bristol-Myers Co., of New York and Anahist Co., Inc., of Yonkers, N. Y., were accused yesterday by the Federal Trade Commission of using false and misleading advertising to sell their antihistamine cold drugs.

The Bristol-Myers product is called "Resistabs," while Anahist sells its pills under the trade name "Anahist." Each company is charged with misrepresenting therapeutic properties and effectiveness of its product in the prevention and treatment of the common cold.

The firms have 20 days in which to answer the Government complaints.

The complaints contend the products neither cure, prevent nor treat adequately or competently the common cold and its manifestations. The complaints further attack as "deceptive" advertised representations as to the safety of the products.

Both Resistabs and Anahist "may be unsafe and produce injury or harm to the user" contrary to advertised claims, the commission said.

The complaints describe as false and misleading claims by the firms that they have reliable facts to support the prophylactic and therapeutic value of their products. Actually, the Government said, neither company has knowledge and reliable information to support its claims.

Drug Firms Deny Misleading Public

New York, March 20 (U.P.).—Bristol-Meyers Co. and Anahist Co. today described as "completely erroneous" Federal Trade Commission charges that they were using false and misleading advertising to sell their antihistamine cold drugs.

"The allegations—and they are purely allegations—are completely erroneous and at variance from the true facts," said Robert R. Brown, vice president and general manager of Bristol-Meyers. "All advertising of Resistab has been based upon thorough clinical and scientific investigation."

Stanley Lasdon, executive vice president of Anahist, said, "Every advertising claim we have made is backed by clinical evidence . . . Anahist does not claim to destroy the cold virus. It is directed only to the relief of the cold symptoms."

FTC Ruling On Medicine 'Ad' Quashed

An advertisement for a patent medicine that relieves certain types of lassitude need not contain a statement that it is useless in combatting other kinds of weariness, the United States Court of Appeals ruled yesterday.

It was a split decision, with Judges E. Barrett Prettyman and Wilbur K. Miller saying that the Federal Trade Commission went too far in limiting the advertisements of the Alberty's Food Products Co. of California. Judge David L. Bazelon disagreed, saying that the public is entitled to know the whole truth.

The case arose when the FTC saw an Alberty advertisement for a product called Oxorin.

Alberty Agrees

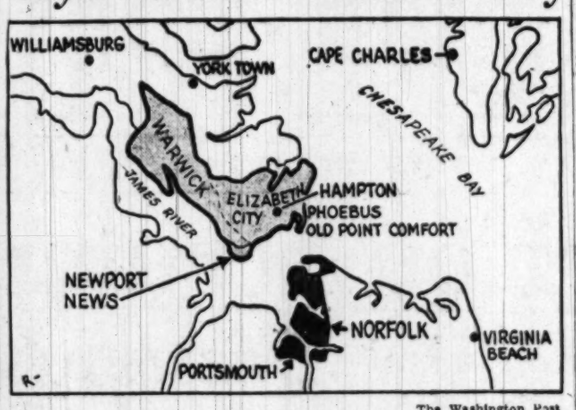
The FTC told Alberty that he could say that Oxorin might relieve run-down condition due to simple iron deficiency anemia. Alberty agreed to this, but then the FTC said that he would have to add, "that the condition of lassitude is caused less frequently by simple iron deficiency anemia than by other causes and that in such cases this preparation will not be effective in relieving or correcting it."

It was the FTC's contention that Alberty was using false advertising without the addition.

Judge Prettyman pointed out, however, that the FTC "is not given a general charter to police the expenditure of people's money or generally to do whatever is considered by it to be just and beneficial."

As to another Alberty product known as Phospho B, the court said that the advertisements need not tell the public that only the homeopathic medical schools recognize it as effective for treating sleeplessness and nervousness.

Virginia's Third Largest City May Be Created at Polls Today



The Washington Post

THIRD LARGEST?—Map shows area which, if consolidated, would become the third largest city in Virginia. Only Old Point Comfort, as Federal property, would not join the new municipality. Voting by residents of the area is today

Newport News, Va., March 20 (U.P.)—A new major city may be voted into existence Tuesday, destined to have from the start 165,000 or so inhabitants.

It would be "Hampton Roads, Va.," a consolidation of Newport News, Hampton, Phoebus, and the counties of Warwick and Elizabeth City.

Voters of the five independent subdivisions jammed together here on the tip of Virginia's lower peninsula have already won a charter from the State Legislature, and will cast the deciding ballots Tuesday.

Claim Millions Spent

Norfolk and Portsmouth fought bitterly against the idea and especially the name. They claim they have spent millions of dollars in advertising the entire area as the Port of Hampton Roads, and have as much historical right to the name as do the others.

They tried to have use of the term as a city name forbidden by law, but failed. If Hampton Roads, Va., is created Tuesday, it would be the third largest city in Virginia by a comfortable margin.

Streets of the five subdivisions already run together and there is no break in the rows of residences and sprawling housing projects that mushroomed up during the war days.

But any one of the five may veto the plan and observers predict that a death blow may be cast by tiny Elizabeth City County. Elizabeth City is protected from danger of annexation by a State statute stipulating that no county can be reduced below 60 square miles in area.

Supporters of consolidation, led by the lower peninsula Junior Chamber of Commerce, have waged a vigorous campaign arguing that a merger would effect lower Government costs and end the long bickering between Newport News and her smaller neighbors. This city recently threatened to levy a payroll tax on all noncity residents who work in her shipyards and other industries.

If the bigger consolidation is defeated, Hampton, Phoebus and Elizabeth City plan a smaller consolidation of governments to buck Newport News. And Newport News, reaching desperately for more room, would renew annexation proceedings to acquire 11 square miles of Warwick County.

Steps to Keep Older Workers In Jobs Urged

By the United Press

Prof. Sumner H. Slichter, prominent Harvard University economist yesterday, urged Congress to set up a social security system that would encourage industry to open up jobs for older workers.

Testifying before the Senate Finance Committee, he suggested that employers be encouraged to hire workers over 65 by partial salary rebates.

For example, he said, such employers might receive from the Government sums amounting to one-third of the amount the older workers would have received from social security benefits if they had chosen to retire.

Under present law, a person over 65 who continues working in a gainful occupation forfeits all benefit rights as long as he works.

The Senate group is considering a House-approved bill to broaden social security coverage and increase benefits. Slichter is acting chairman of the committee's advisory council on social security.

Slichter asserted that medicine has made "spectacular" progress in lengthening the human life span, and that workers are reaching 65 in "better and better health."

He said there are about 2,800,000 workers over 65 in this country today producing an estimated 10 billion dollars worth of goods each year.

The trend toward earlier and earlier retirements is "bad for the Nation's economy" because it wastes human resources and "deprives society of the older worker's output," he testified.

Slichter said the provisions of the House bill do not go far enough. Specifically, he said:

Instead of bringing an additional 11 million workers under Social Security, as the present bill would do, all workers now exempt—about 25 million—should be included.

College Aid Bill Passed By House

The House yesterday passed a bill that would give land grant colleges an immediate Federal payment of some 10 million dollars and a better break on GI tuition fees from now on.

The measure would settle a four-year argument between the colleges and the Veterans' Administration. The land-grant institutions claim they have been getting a raw deal on the veterans' education payments.

VA, the Budget Bureau and the General Accounting Office opposed the bill. The Federal Security Agency was for it.

The House approved the bill, 245 to 101, on a roll call vote and sent it to the Senate.

More than a third of the 70-odd land-grant schools would benefit. Only those which charge higher rates for veterans than other students would be affected.

Under a long-standing Federal help program, land-grant colleges annually get about five million dollars from the Federal Government. Most of it goes to pay teachers.

Under the GI education program, the VA reimburses all colleges for the cost of teaching veterans. In 1946 the agency issued its controversial ruling—that land grant colleges must deduct from their tuition claims whatever part of the land-grant payments had gone into the cost of teaching veterans.

The veterans committee, in sending the bill to the House, said the regulation "penalized" the land grant schools. Under the legislation VA estimates the colleges would get right away an estimated $10 million to be split among the schools which have had to pare down their tuition claims.

In the future, they would get the full tuition checks—estimated at about $2 million for the next fiscal year.

House Passes Compromise Bill Halving Rent Control Funds

By the United Press

The House passed an emergency money bill yesterday that gives Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods slightly less than half what he asked to enforce rent controls through next June 30.

The measure, carrying a total of 709 million dollars in supplemental operating funds for various Federal agencies, now goes to the Senate. It is a compromise drafted by a joint conference committee after the Senate and House passed differing versions.

The House approved it by voice vote despite a warning from Representative Sidney R. Yates (D., Ill.) that the cutback in rent control funds will "mean a drastic reduction in service" by Woods' agency.

He also disclosed that the 29-billion-dollar omnibus appropriation bill for fiscal 1951—which may be reported out today—carries no funds for rent control in the 12 months beginning next July 1.

But Chairman Brent Spence (D., Ky.) assured members that his banking committee plans to hold hearings "at a later date" on a separate bill to continue Federal ceilings for another year. The present rent law expires at the end of the 1950 fiscal year, June 30.

Most of the emergency funds approved yesterday were earmarked for the Veterans Administration, which has been caught short by an unexpected high outlay for training under the GI bills of rights. The Atomic Energy Commission was granted contract authority to press its plant-expansion program.

The bill conforms exactly to the Senate version in the rent section, which provides a total of four million dollars for Woods' office. But of this, $2,600,000 is set aside for severance pay to lay off employes.

The remaining $1,400,000 could be spent on operating expenses—a purpose for which Woods asked $3,600,000.

Omnibus Funds Bill To Be Reported Today

By The Associated Press

GOP budget-cutters withheld their fire yesterday as the House Appropriations Committee tentatively approved some 16 billion dollars in spending for almost every Federal agency except the Defense Department.

After approving that much of an omnibus 29-billion-dollar money bill wrapping up almost all proposed Government financing for fiscal year 1950-51, the committee quit until this morning.

The only thing it failed to act on yesterday were the Army, Navy and Air Force funds in the bill, which aggregate about $12,800,000,000. Members predicted the defense money would be approved without change today and the entire omnibus bill sent to the House.

Chairman Cannon (D., Mo.) told newsmen there were "no changes" in the sections considered yesterday.

On the basis of unofficial figures made public by committee sources, these approximate amounts were tentatively approved yesterday:

Treasury and Postoffice Departments (considered together): cut from $2,812,000,000 to $2,753,000,000. (This includes an expected $1,700,000,000 in postal revenues).

Independent Offices, including Atomic Energy Commission and the Veterans' Administration: cut from $8,458,000,000 to $8,024,000,000.

Agriculture Department: cut from 799 million dollars to 764 million dollars.

Labor Department and Federal Security Agency: cut from $2,462,000,000 to $2,271,000,000.

Army Engineers: cut from 834 million to less than 650 million dollars.

Interior Department: cut from 669 million dollars to 621 million dollars.

State, Justice and Commerce Departments: cut from $1,184,000,000 to $1,110,000,000.

Legislative Department: cut from 65 million dollars to 56 million dollars.

Committee members said a subcommittee has recommended a cut in defense funds from $13,028,000,000 to $12,800,000,000.

Truman Confers With Legislative Heads by Phone

Key West, Fla., March 20 (AP)—President Truman held a 15-minute long distance conference with Vice President Barkley and Speaker Rayburn this morning on a two-way hook-up.

Press Secretary Ross said they had a general discussion covering "the general legislative situation" but did not disclose what bills were discussed.

Later, the President went to the beach to swim and sunbath.

The President, it was learned, is about ready to announce the appointment of a new chairman for the Atomic Energy Commission.

The appointment may follow the arrival here of Donald Dawson, administrative assistant, Mr. Truman's contact man of appointments with the Democratic National Committee, Congress and the departments.

Some members of the President's party said there was evidence also that Mr. Truman may fill, before he ends his vacation at this naval submarine station, the long-vacant chairmanship of the National Security Resources Board.

McCloy Warns Reds On Berlin March Plan

Berlin, March 20 (AP).—United States High Commissioner John J. McCloy gave advance warning today that Communists themselves will be held to account for any violence in Berlin during the Red youth rally here May 27-30.

McCloy said he saw no need for extra troops. After conferring with Maj. Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor and the British and French commandants on their plans for maintaining order when 500,000 East German Communist youths are scheduled to march on Berlin, he told newsmen:

"We are prepared for trouble even though we are not seeking any opportunity to hit anybody on the head. If there is any violence and anyone is hurt, it is the responsibility of those who instigated it."

He said House and Senate committees he saw in Washington last week showed great interest in the Communist demonstration. He said he may be in Berlin during the rally and it is possible the entire Allied High Commission will hold one of it smeetings here at that time.

Asked to comment on Winston Churchill's proposal for a West German armed force, the high commissioner said:

"We ought to talk a little bit more about armed forces for western Europe before we talk about armed forces in Germany. The job is to build up something there—not in Germany."

'Mystery Fighters' Reported By Chinese Nationalist Fliers

Taipei, Formosa, March 20 (AP).—The Chinese Nationalist air force, unopposed in the sky throughout the civil war, has just had a near-encounter with three mystery planes in the Shanghai vicinity, the Defense Ministry announced today.

It said the Nationalist planes, returning from a mission over Shanghai, sighted the strangers Saturday and "were about to attack the mysterious aircraft when they escaped in a northwesterly direction."

The ministry added only that the planes were not American.

Nationalist officials in the past have alleged the Russians were planning to supply the Chinese Communists with planes. There have been persistent rumors the Russians actually had furnished 200 planes.

The Air Ministry announced its planes had pounded the Shanghai waterfront again today with undisclosed results. The Canton, Foochow, and Amoy areas also were hit.

The Nationalist news service alleged that 4000 Soviet troops had arrived at Nanking February 20 and had been posted as railway guards on the Nanking-Shanghai line. It intimated that they were antiaircraft gunners. It quoted a recent arrival from the mainland for this unconfirmed report.

2 Slain at Mass

Rome, March 20 (AP).—A 23-year-old Italian went berserk while attending mass in a village church today and ran amok with a knife, stabbing two persons to death and gravely wounding seven others.

Poles Remodel Government, Copy Russia

Warsaw, March 20 (AP).—The Polish Parliament today abolished local government authorities, thereby taking a further step toward modifying the nation's administrative system along Russia's lines.

The act either eliminated the local organs of government or transferred their personnel to the centralized civil service. Their executive and administrative functions were placed in the hands of a "national council."

Under the new law, national councils at village level will elect members to national councils at district levels. Finally, still other national councils at the level of the towns will join to elect national councils for the provinces, or states.

Despite the term "national" in these titles, all these bodies will be subordinated to the present Council of State, the Council of Ministers (cabinet) and individual ministries of the central government.

(The Council of State is composed of the President of the Republic, the president and three vice-presidents of Parliament, and the chairman of the Supreme Control Chamber, which controls state accounts.)

The Government today stripped the Roman Catholic Church of all its large estates—a total of 700 square miles of farm lands, livestock and buildings.

Parliament passed unanimously a law under which the land was declared property of the state without any payment to the church or liability to the state.

Patrick Henry Stamp Asked by Rep. Abbitt

By The Associated Press

A special postage stamp to commemorate the 175th anniversary of a speech made by Patrick Henry in which he said "Give me Liberty or give me death" will be issued under a bill introduced yesterday by Representative Abbitt (D., Va.).

The stamp would go on sale at Richmond, Va., a day earlier than elsewhere.

Hour of Crisis For Catholics In Prague Near

Prague, March 20 (U.P.).—Leaders of all churches in Czechoslovakia, except the Roman Catholic, took oaths of loyalty today before Premier Antonin Zapotocky, the official news agency announced.

Today's action left the Catholic Board of Bishops isolated here as the only clergymen in the country who have not shown the allegiance to the state.

The announcement meant the hour of crisis for the Catholic Church is near.

The government has said that Archbishop Josef Beran, Catholic primate who has been confined to his palace in Prague since last June 19, and his fellow bishops will be called before Zapotocky to swear fidelity. The bishops have declared they can never take this oath to the Communist government.

Fourteen "terrorists and spies," who allegedly worked under the direction of United States, French and Vatican City espionage services, went on trial today at Hodonin, in southern Moravia. One of the defendants was a Catholic priest who read Beran's defiant letters from his pulpit.

The newspaper Lidova Demokracie said "several Catholic priests" directed activities on the spot, but they had escaped.

Among other crimes, the defendants were accused of murdering an officer of the security police.

Bill Would Give More Jurisdiction To Capitol Police

Senator Dennis Chavez (D., N. Mex.) yesterday introduced a bill to broaden Capitol Police jurisdiction to take in the site of the proposed new Senate Office Building.

Anti-Leopold Strikes Spread In Belgium

Brussels, Belgium, March 20 (AP). Anti-Leopold Socialist action committees tonight voted to call a 24-hour general strike for Friday in Brussels and southern Belgium.

The action was taken as a spokesman for Belgium's largest political party, the Social Christians, declared they would bring exiled King Leopold back to his throne "to stay" despite the wave of Socialist strikes.

The Socialists, who have announced they would call a series of 24-hour strikes until Leopold abdicates, tied up 128 ships at Antwerp today with a walkout of 11,000 dockers, ship repairmen and other workers. The main sea lock was blocked when lock operators refused to move a Norwegian ship. Other ships were stranded for lack of pilots.

About 20,000 other strikers closed down foundries and engineering plants in Brussels, Huy and Ghent and streetcar service in the textile city of Verviers.

The Liege Anti-Leopoldist Committee also voted for a general 24-hour strike for Friday which may be extended to the whole province by other committees.

A Social Christian spokesman indicated the party, which lacks a majority by two votes in the House of Representatives, would try to form a government on its own in order to bring about the unconditional return of Leopold.

"Without the Liberals we will form a government, call a joint session of the Parliament and have the expected vote to bring Leopold back," he said. "We will bring Leopold to stay whether or not it implies a dissolution of Parliament."

Social Christian Premier Gaston Eyskens and his cabinet of Social Christians and Liberals resigned Saturday. The Liberals refused to back a move to call both houses of Parliament into joint session to repeal the law setting up a regency to perform Leopold's constitutional functions.

There were reports tonight the Liberals had refused to join a new cabinet and that Eyskens was toying with the idea of putting together a Cabinet of Social Christians and Liberals who are not members of Parliament.

First Four B-29s Leave Here For England in Arms Aid Plan

Four American-built B-29s took off for Britain yesterday to serve as "sentinels of freedom" on guard against a possible Russian attack on western Europe.

The reconditioned bombers are the first of about 75 that will be given to the British government under America's one-billion-dollar military aid program.

Moments before they left nearby Andrews Field, Secretary of Defense Johnson said the B-29s "should prove harbingers of peace because they are symbols of strength; and peace today is possible only through strength."

They will be, he added, "sentinels of freedom for the peace-loving nations of the North Atlantic area."

Johnson spoke at airport ceremonies attended by other American officials and British representatives. He said the B-29s will be followed by a "growing volume" of military equipment for the eight North Atlantic countries sharing in the aid program.

The seven-year-old planes, once the heaviest the American Air Force could send aloft, now are clased as "medium bombers." The giant B-36 is alone in the heavy bombers class now.

But the B-29s' 2000-mile combat range and 10-ton load are expected to add considerable striking power to the British air force. The British, in line with Allied defense plans, have concentrated on building speedy jet fighters, leaving bomber production to the United States.

Latins Warn U. S. Investors To Limit Guaranty Demands

American private investors were warned yesterday not to ask for too many guarantees before putting their money into Latin-American development projects.

The warning came from Chairman Julio E. Heutematte of Panama at the opening of a special session of the Inter-American Economic and Social Council. The conference has been called to discuss, among other things, technical assistance and development funds in the American republics.

Heurtematte said the Point Four program, first announced in President Truman's inaugural last year, provided only for technical help, and he reminded the delegates that "private capital will have to play a preponderant part" in financing the proposed program.

Development programs, he said, should be "reciprocally beneficial to all the parties concerned." He thought the Inter-American council should work out the bases of Point Four aid and private investment in the hemisphere instead of relying on "other international organizations"—a veiled reference to the United Nations—to do the job.

Alberto Lleras, secretary general of the Organization of American States, told the delegates of 21 countries that the Point Four program was the very reverse of old-fashioned colonial exploitation. The idea that the more advanced nations have a moral obligation to share their progress with the rest, he said, was a revolutionary one.

The conference chose as its president Argentina's minister of the treasury, Dr. Ramson Cereijo, the highest-ranking delegate. As chairman of the important committee on development, which will discuss the Point Four program, it elected Edward G. Miller, jr., assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs.

The council will begin its committee sessions this morning at the building of the Pan-American Union.

Student Strike Follows Riot In Indo-China

Saigon, Indo-China, March 20 (AP). Students at Saigon's public and private schools decided to strike today in protest at the death of two of their comrades in Sunday's anti-American riots.

A policeman also was killed and 30 persons injured when about 4000 demonstrators, carrying the red gold-starred flag of Ho Chi Minh's Moscow-recognized Viet Namese, seized the market place and burned part of it down.

The demonstrators, dispersed after four hours by police using tear gas and guns fired in the air, were protesting the presence in the harbor of two U. S. destroyers, the Stickell and Anderson.

The destroyers, here on a visit to the capital as a gesture of support for the Viet Nam state of former emperor Bao Dai, left today. They were fired on by Ho's guerillas Saturday.

French-supported Viet Namese authorities today suspended Saigon's newspapers for two weeks. The papers had refused to publish in protest against official orders to print nothing about the Sunday riot except official statements.

Police arrested a French member of the "Marxist Cultural Group" and also a leading Viet Namese lawyer named Nguyen Huu Tho on charges of leading the demonstration.

About 3000 of the demonstrators were students and 1000 were workmen.

A Viet Namese official said the demonstration had been foreshadowed by agitation in schools and colleges which were allowed to reopen only two weeks ago. The official added that the schools may be closed again.

A communique by Premier Nguyen Phan Long said the students were "led, instigated and fanaticized by extremist elements" acting behind the scenes. He added that strong measures were being taken to assure public order.

The French reported another of the scattered battles that have kept Indo-China in turmoil since the Japanese surrender in 1945 and Ho's attempt to establish a republic completely independent of France. The French said they captured about 100 of Ho's guerillas and killed 27 in an action.

Collector Held in Papers Theft

Cambridge, Mass., March 20 (U.P.). A rare book peddler with a penchant for priceless historical documents was arrested today on charges of larceny of invaluable papers from State House archives and Harvard University.

Harold E. Perry, 45, said to own one of the best collections of original papers on New Hampshire's White Mountains, confessed stealing some of the documents because he loved them rather than for profit, police reported.

Among the documents missing from the State House, were letters written by George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Paul Revere and Benedict Arnold. Police said they were taken between 1938 and 1946 while Perry was employed there.

Perry has returned some of the State House documents, according to James F. Kane, chief of the archives division of the Massachusetts Secretary of State's office.

Labor Majority in Commons Temporarily Reduced to Three

London, March 20 (AP).—The majority of seven which the Labor government had when it took office was reduced to three today—temporarily.

Labor lost in the Moss Side District at Birmingham in a delayed election March 9, cutting its majority to six.

Last week Adam McKinlay, a Scot representing Dumbartonshire, died and the majority was five. The date of a by-election to fill the vacancy has not been set.

Today Laborite Harry Morris, from the Neepsend District of Sheffield, in a sacrifice play, vacated his seat for a member of the government, Solicitor General Frank Soskice, who was beaten in the general election. The Labor Party of Neepsend, where Morris won by 19,006, immediately named Soskice for the vacancy. Morris' vacation left a majority of four, since the date for the Soskice by-election has not been set.

Later today, Labor Member O. G. Willey from the Cleveland District of Yorkshire, entered a hospital for treatment for his leg, and Labor's majority was three—temporarily. It is not known how long he will be confined.

Government Appeals UMW Contempt Case

By The Associated Press

The Government yesterday asked the Circuit Court of Appeals to overrule Judge Richmond B. Keech and punish John L. Lewis' miners for contempt of court in the recent coal strike.

It contended that union oficers "with tongue in cheek" gave only "sham" obedience to a court order to call off the walkout.

The Justice Department added that if Judge Keech's decision clearing the United Mine Workers is allowed to stand, Federal courts will be "impotent" to deal with strikes in critical emergencies.

The argument was advanced in a brief submitted to the higher court. Arguments will be heard on April 26.

"A plainer case of sham and pretense could hardly be presented," the Government lawyers said of Lewis' back-to-work order to his miners following Judge Keech's restraining order, February 11.

"Whereas the terms of the (Keech) order called for urgent, even drastic, action on the part of the union officers, they nevertheless contended themselves with a bookish, ineffectual note-writing compliance while at the same time boldly utilizing to union advantage the disobedience of its members," the Government brief asserted.

"In finding the union not guilty of contempt, the lower court reached a result wholly unsupported by the evidence . . . ," the Justice attorneys said.

Judge Keech ruled there was insufficient evidence that Lewis and other UMW officers had any responsibility for the refusal of the 370,000 striking soft coal miners to go back to work after the judge issued the injunction.

Lewis and the union have been fined a total of $2,130,000 for disregard of injunctions in previous strikes. Lewis was not charged personally with contempt this time.

Many lawyers considered a heavy fine unlikely, pointing out that only civil contempt is involved in the appeal action. But even a nominal penalty would set the precedent the Government wants.

The contempt acquittal was quickly followed by a settlement of the long strike and 10-months-old dispute, on March 5.

Lewis and his union leadership are "not so inept that the use of the powers of the leaders in Washington over these district representatives and the power of this latter group over local unions could not have been brought to bear in a manner appropriate to terminate the strike," the Government said.

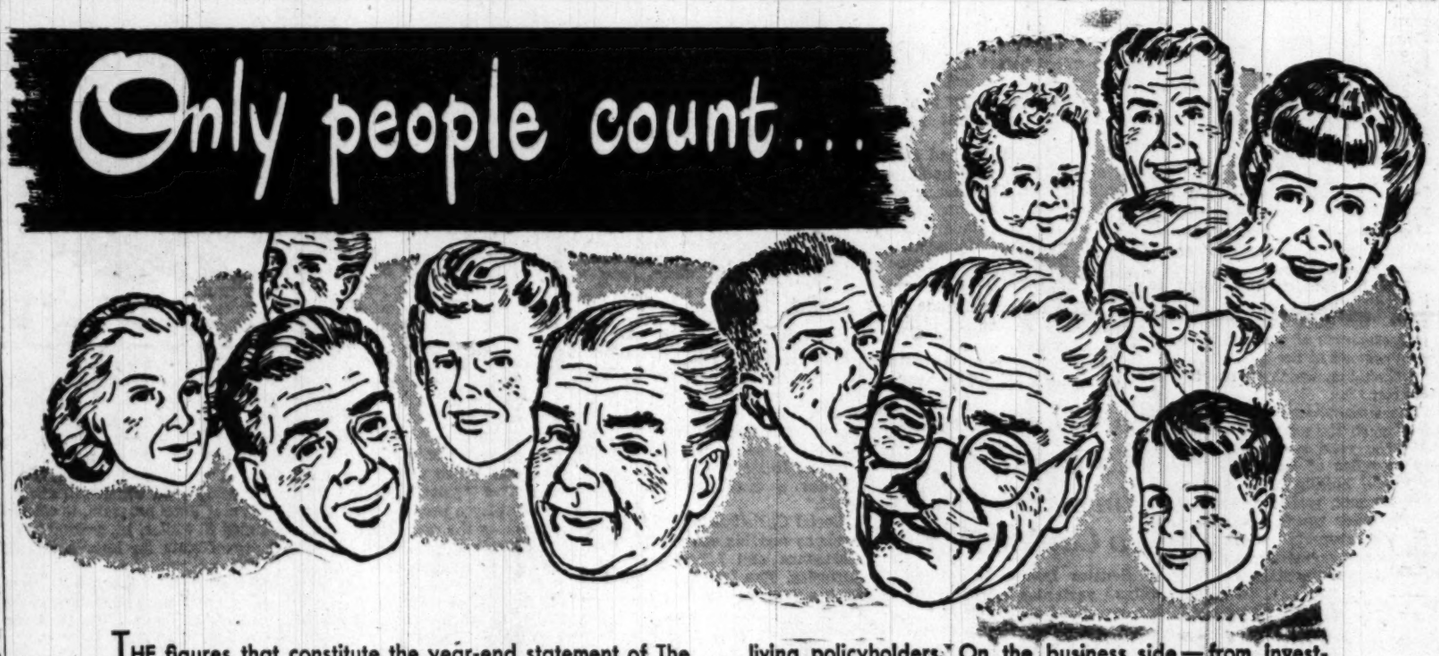
Only people count . . .



THE figures that constitute the year-end statement of The Equitable Life Assurance Society may seem overwhelming at first glance : : : but they readily come alive when considered in terms of the human values they represent.

Simply stated, for more than 4,350,000 Americans, here is their hope of economic security; the financial foundation on which they can build for the future; the open door to better things in life. Thus, the figures you see on this page have more than statistical meaning—they project a picture of what life-insurance-dollars accomplish in promoting human welfare.

For instance : : : the $608,500,000 received in premiums by The Society during 1949 provided life insurance coverage of $14,115,700,000 in addition to annuities and accident and health protection. In 1949 payments to Equitable Society members and their beneficiaries totalled $335,000,000 of which $115,000,000 represented death claims, and $220,000,000 were payments, including dividends, to living policyholders. On the business side—from investments and insurance operations, The Society earned $142,700,000 of which $6,000,000 was set aside to strengthen reserves and $83,800,000 was allotted for policyholders' dividends.

At the same time, life insurance funds perform a double duty in the economic life of our nation. While they are providing protection, they are also financing homes, building factories, helping to improve railroads, participating in scores of industries—in short, contributing materially to the highest living standard known to mankind.

Look beyond the figures in this annual report and you will see life insurance in action on many levels. But remember, it is the human level which is of greatest concern to us : : : for after all, only people count.

Jessup Gives Lashing Reply to McCarthy charges were made. Tydings did not see why the right of confrontation should not work in reverse, with McCarthy confronting the accused.

As a matter of fact, Tydings went on, probably Jessup had more right to interrogate McCarthy than vice versa. A jam-packed audience in the Senate Caucus Room gave Tydings a hand for that sally.

McCarthy, sitting just behind Tydings, interposed that he was ready to be questioned by Jessup.

"I haven't called on you yet," Tydings snapped.

And, he continued, when he did call on McCarthy, he would like to question him on a "number of discrepancies" in his charges, particularly his allegation some weeks ago that there were "57 card-carrying Communists in the State Department, known to the Secretary of State."

"So far you have not named a single person as being a card-carrying Communist or a Communist Party member," Tydings said to McCarthy, and yet the broad, unsubstantiated charge has been broadcast throughout the country.

Threatens to Shun Sessions

After the hearings, McCarthy told reporters that questioning of Jessup was "useless," and that further examination of witnesses would also be futile unless he was allowed to conduct a cross-examination, and unless the subcommittee first had possession of all the State Department, FBI and Civil Service files on the individuals.

If he were not allowed to interrogate witnesses, McCarthy continued, he would no longer attend any of the sessions of the subcommittee, for they would be "a waste of my time."

In his prepared statement, Jessup said that there were only three possible hypotheses to explain McCarthy's charge against him.

The first was that the charge was Communist-inspired.

If he chose to "follow the tactics which you gentlemen have witnessed in recent weeks," Jessup said, he could argue, on the theory of "guilt by association," that McCarthy was trying to assist the international Communist movement. For, Jessup pointed out, the only other attacks on him have come from the Moscow papers and the Communist organs in China.

But, he said, he had no evidence that McCarthy was moved by such a desire, and besides, he, Jessup, did not believe in the doctrine of guilt by association.

Second Hypothesis

The second hypothesis was that "such an attempt to discredit the position of the United States in its relations with the other free countries of the world was inspired by sheer partisanship."

But, he said, it was "hard to believe" that any Member of Congress would so subordinate the interests of his country to sheer partisan advantage."

The third possibility was that the accuser had made a careful investigation of the charges and was convinced they were true and so serious that they ought to be made public even before the individuals concerned had been asked for their side of the story."

Jessup spent most of the rest of his testimony demonstrating his own vigorous, prolonged and distinguished activities, combatting Soviet pressures and attacks, as an official of the State Department and as a U. S. representative on a series of United Nations bodies.

At the conclusion, Senator Green (D., R. I.), a member of the subcommittee, congratulated him and noted how easy it was for him to clear himself and how fortunate he was, through his high position and many friends, to be able to refute the accusations with such ease.

But, Green went on, he wondered what would have happened to Jessup had he been young and unknown. What "appalling" harm might be done to a young and unknown man in the State Department by the leveling of such attacks against him, Green noted.

At Green's invitation, Jessup developed the point on the harm done to American foreign policy by McCarthy's charges against him.

"It is so important at this serious juncture in international affairs" that the United States should appear, through statements at home and through its representatives abroad, to "speak with one voice," Jessup said.

He explained that he did not mean there should be no right to differing opinions on any policy, including foreign policy. But, he said, it is "a matter of utmost seriousness" in the successful conduct of foreign relations "if the qualifications and integrity of persons selected as American representatives are called into question."

With McCarthy unable to interrogate Jessup, Senator Hickenlooper (R., Iowa) took over the job.

10-Year-Old Connections

He developed two connections, nebulous and 10 years old, betwee Jessup and organizations dubbed as Communist fronts several years afterwards.

Jessup himself had noted with "pride" his membership in one organization, the American-Russian Institute, during a period when "there was no reason why a loyal American" should not have joined it. He pointed out he had refused appearances before it after it was found to be subversive.

Hickenlobper questioned him about his appearance as character witness for Alger Hiss, during the latter's trial. Jessup said he saw no reason to repudiate the testimony he had given, but would not comment further, since the case was still in the courts and he, Jessup, was a member of the bar.

Hickenlooper also brought up a letter Jessup signed, in company with several other members of the Columbia University faculty, urging armistice on American manufacture of afomic bombs.

Jessup pointed out the letter was written in early 1946, several months before the Baruch plan for atomic control was made known, and before Russia's attitude of noncooperation on control plans was even intimated.

Obviously, he said, he would not make any such recommendation now.

Queried On China Policy

Hickenlooper queried Jessup at some length on his views about United States-Chinese policy. At first, Green demurred at this line of interrogation, wanting to know what bearing it had on Jessup's loyalty.

But Senator McMahon (D., Conn.) immediately cut in with a plea that the question be permitted. For those questions, he said, are "very enlightening."

"The original beachhead (of McCarthy and his associates) has been abandoned," McMahon declared. "If they want to reestablish it with this witness, let them go ahead."

McMahon was alluding to a point that has become increasingly interesting in the course of McCarthy's presentation of charges. This is the preponderance of emphasis on the dispute over American policy in the past months over the China question.

McCarthy's most extensive, and bitterest, documentation has been with respect to persons in the State Department connected with that part of its work.

Letter Sent to Tydings

Even yesterday, before Jessup testified, McCarthy made available copies of a letter he sent Tydings condemning Jessup for his connection with Far Eastern matters.

In the latter, McCarthy softpedaled his charge of "unusual affinity with Communist causes" and stressed instead, Jessup's alleged close association with and reliance on Owen Lattimore. Lattimore, a Johns Hopkins University professor and frequent State Department adviser, was the target of a blistering attack by McCarthy last week.

McCarthy's letter said Jessup was one of the group that "delivered China to communism."

Yesterday Tydings received from McCarthy the long-sought names connected with the "81 cases" of alleged Communist infiltration in the State Department, about which McCarthy made a speech to the Senate on February 20.

Tydings said he would try to obtain the files on these and other individuals mentioned by McCarthy. But by last night had not received word from the State Department whether they would be made available to his subcommittee.

At present, therefore, it has no plans for future procedure. Meantime, a meeting of the members has not yet been held to determine what, if any, future witnesses will be heard, and whether McCarthy will be allowed to cross-examine them.

Marine Corps League Gives McCarthy Award

Passaic, N. J., March 20 (AP)—Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.) was named today as the winner of the Marine Corp League's national Americanism award for 1950.

The award, announced by the league's Americanism chairman, John R. O'Brien of Passaic, cited the senator for "rousing the Nation to the menace of bad security risks in our Government."

The Marine Corps League is a national organization of marine veterans.

Drew Pearson Says Taft Told McCarthy to 'Keep on Talking'

Drew Pearson said yesterday that Senator Taft (R., Ohio) had advised Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.) to "keep on talking" about his charges of Communists in the State Department.

The columnist declared that Taft told other Republican Senators at a recent Capitol luncheon:

"I told Joe (McCarthy) to keep on talking, keep them confused. If he keeps talking long enough, people will believe him."

Senator Taft could not be reached for comment last night.

Pearson made the statement in a luncheon address at the Hotel Continental before the Washington Grocery Manufacturers' Representatives. The luncheon was held to honor officials of the Giant food store chain.

Pearson criticized the Wisconsin Senator's attack on the State Department. He said the charges were having a bad reaction abroad and that "when we need friends abroad, we give the appearance of being torn with internal dissension."

The columnist said McCarthy had made "wild charges," first declaring there were 205 card-carrying Communists in the State Department, then reducing the number to 57. Most State employes, Pearson said, are "sincere" and "reasonably hard working."

Pearson told the luncheon he was sorry President Truman had not taken a "high type" Republican into his administration to help with the bi-partisan foreign policy.

"spy ring" charges limited access to loyalty files.

If Tydings requests access to the files, this official said, it likely will be given under these tight conditions:

1. Any inspection would be made at the White House, and by members of the committee only. McCarthy is not a member of the committee.

2. Files would be open for inspection only where they involved the records of persons specifically accused by McCarthy.

3. The inspection would be limited in each case to papers bearing on specific charges. (In other words, the entire files of a person specifically accused would not necessarily be available.)

This official said the President and Senator Tydings have a "pretty good understanding" under which the inspection will be allowed in cases where Tydings feels they would help clear up cases under investigation. The "limited access," the official added, would apply to FBI, as well as State Department, loyalty files and the files of the Civil Service.

U. S. Traces Chambers Rumors

Governments agents have traced "vicious" stories about the character of Whittaker Chambers to the mouths of "some of our favorite writers," Thomas F. Murphy, the man who prosecuted Alger Hiss, asserted last night.

Murphy declined to give the nature of the "vicious" stories and said he was "not at liberty at this time" to reveal the identity of the writer "rumor-mongers."

Murphy delivered the fourth in the William Gaston lecture series at Georgetown University before a packed audience in Gaston Hall.

Murphy said the courage of Chambers in giving up a $30,000-a-year job to testify against Hiss was particularly praiseworthy in view of the vicious attacks.

Agents picked up the rumors in Third avenue saloons and again "among the intelligentsia," Murphy said.

"The higher up in the intelligentsia, the more vicious the stories. Part of the intelligentsia motif and decor," Murphy told the students and their guests, "is to be caustic about the FBI and to be skeptical about Hiss' guilt."

Murphy praised the FBI agents and asked skeptics to review the detailed evidence against Hiss.

Hiss was convicted of perjury, largely on the testimony of Chambers, and sentenced to serve five years in prison.

Reds Seen Counting On Panicking U. S.

Soviet military planners are counting on hitting the United States at our "weakest point—our susceptibility to panic"—an American Legion spokesman said yesterday.

Father Paul C. Potter, described by the Legion as the "world's foremost authority on the psychology of panic," told the Congressional Atomic Committee that careful attention is being given at Russian war colleges to translations of American books describing our tendency to mass hysteria.

One, entitled "Invasion from Mars," is a psychiatric analysis made by Princeton University of the national reaction to the Orson Welles broadcast in 1938 of a fictitious invasion from another planet, the Catholic priest said.

Father Potter and other Legion representatives joined three other witnesses in demanding prompt establishment of a Nation-wide civil defense organization to combat problems resulting from a sudden attack on American cities.

Besides "shock-proofing" of the whole population through training and information on atomic warfare, the Legion called for passage of its universal military training program to develop a "trained citizenry" out of the Nation's youth.

Neil R. Allen, chairman of the Legion's civil defense committee, hit the "snail-like progress" and "lack of leadership" of the Federal Government with respect to civil defense. He urged that responsibility for this function be transferred from the National Security Resources Board to the Department of Defense.

Chairman Brien McMahon (D., Conn.), objected that "many things must be done in civil defense that aren't necessarily of a military nature." He also declared, of demands for a "Department of Civil Defense" that it would "duplicate the whole Government," as every agency has "a part to play."

"That's why it was determined that the best way was to set up a coordinating agency (NSRB)," McMahon added. "It hasn't been as much asleep as you and I—or at least I—thought."

"All we mean to say," returned Allen, "is that somebody ought to get busy now, not merely thinking, nor philosophizing nor writing magazine articles. Someone ought to get busy and we think it is Congress."

He urged enactment of a common pattern for civil defense for the Nation, but with local autonomy to prevent infringement of constitutional rights and liberties.

Father Potter, a Colorado psychiatrist who served as an Air Force colonel during the war, said that psychological research has developed means of combating our national "susceptibility to panic."

"Any modern system of national defense which does not give specific attention to the panic-proofing of personnel, civilian as well as military," he added, "is as useless as a gun with a cardboard barrel."

Murray S. Levine, of New York, former Manhattan Project official who took part in the Bikini tests, warned the committee that "our cities are sitting ducks for any possible enemy and the enemy knows it."

Representing the "Civilian Protection Group" of New York, Levine urged that we set up a civil defense arm under the Secretary of Defense, coequal with the Army, Navy and Air Force, and keep selective service for the duration of the cold war, expanded to provide mobilization for civil defense.

Levine declared that by spending our defense billions almost entirely on "offense," we are neglecting "true defense." The B-36 and "push buttons," he said, are our "Maginot Line."

Dr. Walter S. ronin, disaster coordinator for Cambridge, Mass., hit those who argue against a civil defense program because it would "create fear."

"The fear is there," he declared, "You're not going to frighten the people by putting in a civil defense program. You'll reassure them."

construction in the 1951 budget now before Congress. Sherman's statement indicates that only the authorizing legislation for the new ships will be sought this year and appropriations to carry it out delayed until the next session.

"It is time we modernized our Navy," Vinson said. "The ships and planes we now have, both afloat and in moth balls, are the ships and planes of a bygone age."

Declaring that "Russia is building and organizing a modern navy," the Congressman said that the "time has come" for the United States to "build on the developments in research." The money to construct them, he added, must not come out of funds provided for current operating forces.

News to Secretary Johnson

Vinson's bill "authorizes and directs" the President to lay down 50,000 tons of new construction, divided as follows: combatant vessels, 30,000 tons; auxiliary ships, 10,000 tons; experimental types, 10,000 tons. In addition, 125,000 tons of modern combat ships and 75,000 tons of modern auxiliaries would be provided by converting existing ships. The construction and conversion would take five years.

Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson said he had not heard of the building program, unless it was a proposal to lump some old ship construction authorization laws under one bill. Vinson declared it was a "new program."

Hearings on the bill will open about April 1, the Congressman said.

Devalued Money Protests Close Jakarta Stores

Jakarta, U. S. I., March 20 (AP). About two thirds of Jakarta's retail shops remained closed today in refusal to accept Indonesia's newly devaluated guilder. The government said it would use police and troops if necessary to force acceptance of the new money.

The government ordered paper money above the five-guilder denominations literally cut in half. The left-hand half is to be exchanged for new provisional notes worth half the value of the old notes.

The government said it may redeem the right-hand half at some future time in government bonds. Half of all cash and bank accounts above 400 guilders were ordered transferred to government accounts at half their face value as a forced loan.

The Finance Ministry said the 50 percent devaluation of the guilder, formerly worth 26 cents, would reduce money in circulation, tend to force down prices and end strikes for higher wages.

2 Catholic Hospitals Bar Dr. Sander

Manchester, N. H., March 20 (AP). Only hours after two Catholic hospitals announced banning of Dr. Herman N. Sanders, the Hillsborough County Medical Society said tonight a charge has been made against him.

Dr. Lloyd L. Wells, society secretary, issued this brief statement regarding the young country doctor who was acquitted March 9 of a murder charge in the death of cancer victim Mrs. Abbie Borroto:

"A charge has been made against Dr. Hermann Sader. The Hillsboro County Medical Society's constitution and by-laws govern all procedures. No further official comment will be made until these procedures are completed."

Nature of the charge was not disclosed.

Earlier the Notre Dame and Sacred Heart hospitals announced that their staffs last week voted to ban the 37-year-old physician from practicing in their institutions.

Dr. George A. Bastian, jr., secretary of the Sacred Heart staff, said the ban, which was approved by the Most Rev. Matthew F. Brady, Bishop of the Manchester Diocese, was "forever."

Bishop Brady delivered a vigorous attack yesterday on euthanasia or "mercy killing." He did not mention Dr. Sander's trial but the euhtanasia issue has been prominent in the case since its start.

Dr. Adolphe Provost, president of the Notre Dame staff, said the physician was barred at a staff meeting this noon.

Sen. Johnson Concedes Ingrid Can Return for 'Day in Court'

By the United Press

Senator Edwin C. Johnson (D., Colo.) conceded yesterday that film star Ingrid Bergman—whom he has criticized for her real-life love—can return to the United States for "her day in court."

If she does, Johnson said, "in all likelihood she will receive a reception greater than that accorded Charles Lindbergh, General Eisenhower or the King and Queen of England."

"Americans might trample one another for a close view of her for she is a notorious attraction. The youth of the country will have cause to think that America approves her conduct."

Would Not Be True

Johnson said such an interpretation "would be most unfortunate since it would not be true, but it would be far worse if we should bar her entrance for a temporary visit and thereby deny to her her day in court."

Johnson, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, previously had declared that the Swedish-born actress and Roberto Rossellini, Italian film director who fathered her son, "cannot set foot on American soil under our immigration laws."

He clarified that statement today, noting that Miss Bergman "may be a plaintiff in one case and a defendant in another California court." He referred to the fact that her husband, Dr. Peter Lindstrom, is suing for divorce while she is seeking custody of their daughter, Pia.

Based on Legal Opinion

"Certainly she is entitled to her day in court and of course should be admitted for that purpose even though guilty of moral turpitude," Johnson said.

He based his stand on a memorandum on immigration laws prepared by the Senate's legislative counsel. The opinion said Miss Bergman's admission would be discretionary with Attorney General J. Howard McGrath.

Johnson first criticized Miss Bergman and Rossellini last week in proposing that Congress license movies, producers and actors. His committee will hold hearings on the proposal, presumably some time next month.

Crommelin May Enter Race for Senate From Alabama

San Francisco, March 20 (AP).—Captain John G. Crommelin, the furloughed critic of military unification, may file for the U. S. Senate from Alabama.

Crommelin said today that he had received "numerous telephone calls and telegrams" from individuals in his home State urging him to run for Senator Lister Hill's seat next fall.

"If I thought I could be of service I would run," the No. 1 critic of the armed forces unification said. "I thought I could be of more service to my country in the Navy. But if I'm not going to be in the Navy, then I feel perhaps I could be of more service in Congress."

Crommelin was furloughed at half pay last week because of his continued outspoken criticism of unification.

Eccles Said to Eye Utah Senate Race

Marriner S. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board was reported yesterday to be eyeing his chances of getting the Republican senatorial nomination in Utah.

Friends said Eccles has given serious consideration to the idea of becoming a candidate in a State where Democratic Senator Elbert Thomas, a strong Administration supporter, is seeking reelection.

Eccles, a Franklin D. Roosevelt appointee, has been at odds with President Truman's Administration over what he calls its "general easy-money bias."

Interested Republicans made it clear that if Eccles wants their party's nomination, he will have to fight for it.

A three-way race already is developing for the GOP nomination between former Representative William A. Dawson, State Senator Rue Clegg and Preston D. Richards, former assistant solicitor in the State Department. Several other potential candidates are available.

Legislative Institute

Much has been done in recent years to focus attention upon legislative problems. Books on Congress have been written, several investigations into congressional efficiency have been made, and Congress itself responded to public pressure by passing the Legislative Reorganization Act. But the legislative process, like the poor, we have always with us. It will be one of the foremost political problems so long as representative government lasts. Our feeling is that the movement toward improving legislative organization and practices is still in its infancy. It needs the attention and increasing support of thoughtful citizens.

One means of stimulating the interest of scholars, legislators and men of affairs in this subject would be to organize a Legislative Institute, as currently suggested by Ralph M. Goldman. Similar organizations have greatly stimulated objective investigation, criticism and counsel in such fields as public administration, the judicial process, and local government. Surely the legislative process is not less in need of scientific study on an organized basis. The urgent problem of congressional investigations, the growing practice of setting up legislative councils and many related problems could well be subjected to the continued scrutiny that such an institute could give. We hope this seed will fall into fertile soil.

Maritime Hiring Halls

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that the Great Lakes hiring hall system discriminates against nonunion men, and that it is an unfair labor practice for the NMU to require employers to enter into contracts to continue this form of hiring hall. The board has also found the hiring halls operated on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts to be illegal, and the West Coast hiring halls have also been held to be illegal by an NLRB trial examiner. The decision in the Great Lakes case was upheld on appeal and is final, since the Supreme Court recently refused to review it. Consequently the maritime unions will have to abandon the present method of running their hiring halls, unless legislation is passed exempting them from certain restrictive provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Under the system as now operated, members of the union out of work are registered and assigned jobs in rotation. Nonunion members are not actually excluded, but they are given work only when there are no union members available. At present, with thousands of merchant seamen walking the streets, this means, of course, that only union members have a chance of being hired, although technically there is no closed shop clause in contracts between the unions and their employers containing hiring hall provisions.

While admittedly discriminatory, the hiring hall system has brought order out of the chaos that formerly prevailed along the waterfront. Seamen were sometimes shanghaied; they had to pay kickbacks to the agents who hired them; they loitered about the docks or killed time in nearby saloons and lodging houses between jobs; and then had no protection against mistreatment when they were hired. Joseph Curran, president of the NMU, declares that the union does not intend "to go back to the old days when the seamen were victimized by every shipping crimp and shanghai artist." He is spearheading a fight for legalization of the hiring halls, or, more accurately, urging an amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act that would permit the maritime unions to operate hiring halls in accordance with present practices under collective bargaining agreements.

We hope that Congress will respond to this appeal by passing the Magnuson-Lesinski bill to legalize maritime hiring halls. As a rule The Washington Post is opposed to legislation conferring special privileges on any individual or organization—in this case permission to engage in practices defined as unfair and forbidden to other labor unions. The maritime industry, however, presents a great many special problems that set it apart from other industries and justify particularistic treatment. It would, in our opinion, be short-sighted to scrap a hiring system that has proved its worth as a means of distributing work and especially unfortunate to destroy it at a time when the industry is depressed and jobs are scarce. Finally, it is virtually certain that destruction of the hiring halls would mean more maritime strikes and disruption of foreign and domestic waterborne traffic.

The Case Of Dr. Jessup

It is enough to make Elihu Root turn in his grave to see the humiliation to which a Senator of the United States has subjected his protege and biographer, Philip C. Jessup. Dr. Jessup was a deep student and brilliant teacher of the law before he joined the State Department. As a negotiator and diplomat he has made a new reputation. Those who have seen him in action in the United Nations can testify to his skill in presentation and rebuttal. He displays a nimble wit in handling his opponents, and, making use of all interruptions, presses home his arguments with a kind of cumulative effect. For his work at the United Nations he was asked to be ambassador-at-large, and has just come back from a tour of inquiry in Asia. He seems to have returned before due date on purpose to meet the McCarthy charges that he has "an unusual affinity for Communist causes." At this time the charges amount to giving aid and comfort to the enemy. But who in fact is giving the aid and comfort? As Dr. Jessup said at the hearing yesterday, the mere fact that he had to meet these charges is enough to depreciate the value of his mission, and to fill the foreign personages he talked to with a feeling of wonder over the instability of this country's diplomacy. Well, it is safe to say that millions of Americans, too, must have rubbed their eyes in amazement as well as in shame. They were the ones that felt humiliated over the pillorying of a man who is serving them with distinction and dignity in the present struggle.

A servant of the Executive had perforce to take the charge seriously, and give chapter and verse about his life from his birth on. It turns out that Dr. Jessup was not even guilty of those political indiscretions in his youth that Aristide Briand (we think it was) said were necessary growing pains. "If a man wasn't a Socialist by the time he was 30, there is something wrong with him, and if he stays a Socialist after 30, then there is also something wrong with him." In this connotation he implied any unorthodox thinking. Yet Dr. Jessup seems to have been adult even in his youth, possessed of a sense of service, and showing the kind of maturity and ability that caught Mr. Root's eye. Senator McCarthy made himself and his charges look foolish against the background of Dr. Jesssup's career; it was a ridiculous performance of making a sow's ear out of a silk purse. If the matter were only foolish, that might not be so serious, but, since Dr. Jessup is such a high-ranking diplomatic official, it was like kicking through your own goal.

It is becoming clear from the blather in the McCarthy case that the object of this attack is to "get" the architects of our China policy. It is to misuse a term to call what has been done in China a policy—either the Administration's or the Legislature's. The policy that the McCarthy crowd are apparently aiming at is the policy of promoting the Kuomintang-Communist coalition with General Marshall as midwife. Senator McCarthy calls this policy the "Lattimore Front," "the Voice of Lattimore" and other such imbecilities. It was developed in 1945. If an inquiry is needed into its origins, let the subcommittee call General Marshall, for Dr. Jessup was still a professor at Columbia when this policy was adopted, and he had had nothing to do with the Far East, beyond the interest of a private citizen, till he went on his present mission. The current insinuations are enough to drive out of our public life men of the talent and character of Dr. Jessup, and would do so, undoubtedly, but for their patriotism. Patriotism! We hesitate to use a word which has been debased by termnites of the nature of Senator McCarthy. Looming before the Senate is the duty to put an end to the most contemptible and the most disheartening exhibition on the contemporary scene from the standpoint of its own let alone the Nation's prestige.

Reform In Connecticut

Following the example of the Hoover Commission, Connecticut is making a heroic effort to modernize its governmental system. Its Commission on State Government Organization has issued a series of reports indicating that the task of shaping State institutions to the needs of the present day is no less urgent than in the case of the Federal Government. Since the obsolescence that is plaguing Connecticut is typical of conditions to be found in many other States, the example that Gov. Chester Bowles is setting may well prove to be contagious.

At an early stage in the Connecticut study it became apparent that one major millstone around the neck of good government is the State constitution itself. Connecticut has amended her constitution 47 times. The investigators found that it is no longer "fairly intelligible to lay readers." The only way to understand it is, quite literally, to read it backwards. Only a complete redrafting will make it a useful and reliable charter of modern government, and that is what the commission has recommended. Incidentally, the commission thinks it is feasible to avoid calling a constitutional convention—a method that has produced negative results in the past—and to have a new constitution prepared by a legislative commission for submission to the voters.

Much of the streamlining visualized by the commission would be accomplished by means of constitutional changes. Among the changes recommended are the short ballot, concentrating public interest in the election of the Governor, Lieutenant Governor and members of the General Assembly; automatic and periodic redistricting of the Senate; reduction in the size of the House of Representatives; annual sessions of the Assembly, with no fixed adjournment date; prohibition of dual office-holding; elimination of elected sheriffs and probate judges; home rule for towns and cities, with no special local legislation; and a better method of effecting constitutional amendments and revisions. The reorganizers also suggest that provision be made for the recall of elected officers, direct primaries, the initiative and referendum, and an enlarged declaration of rights.

It is a mistake, as the report itself acknowledges, to place too much reliance on the recall, initiative and referendum. The recall is likely to result in mere political harassment, and the initiative and referendum seem scarcely in keeping with the principle of the short ballot, although all three can doubtless be used to advantage in some situations if abuses can be avoided. What is really important is that Connecticut is moving to modify its governmental machinery and its organic law in accord with present-day requirements. The District of Columbia and other areas that are engaged in a similar struggle can only wish Connecticut well in its undertaking.

First Line Of Defense

Now that the hiring practices of the Central Intelligence Agency are in the spotlight, it is opportune for the President and the National Security Council to review the kind of job CIA is doing, and so do a job that has been repeatedly shelved. Intelligence is the eyes and ears of the hot warriors as well as the cold warriors. Its officers are the men upon whom the military rely to ring the bell when they descry the danger of attack. With the fiasco of Pearl Harbor and similar failures in mind, is our intelligence actually good enough to serve as the first line of defense?

Dr. Vannevar Bush, the wartime head of American scientific efforts, says no. In a pithy paragraph in his book, Modern Arms and Free Men, he observes:

> Since the war a Central Intelligence Agency has been created, but it has been under the command of military men whose careers lay elsewhere, it creaks at the joints, and it has not yet amounted to much . . . We need a modern intelligence agency in every sense of the word, using modern methods as they were partially developed during the last war, not a musical-comedy affair or a stodgy refuge, not even the half-successful affair we now have, but an organization qualified to meet our needs in this kind of world . . . The really able men who functioned (during the war) have been largely scattered into civilian life . . . The task can be done by an individual of great mental and organizational capacity, having ample authority and the full backing of the President of the United States. As we value our peace of mind we had better be about it.

Allowance must be made for the lack of cooperation CIA has sometimes encountered, and the agency deserves credit for attempts to overcome the factionalism which has rent it. Nonetheless, Washington is full of stories that it has become a junkyard of phony experts who are more interested in dabbling in policy matters and in grinding axes than in the day-to-day quest for objective truth. Agencies dealing with CIA, particularly the State Department, complain of gross failures in evaluation and of impossible delays, as well as a tendency to cry "wolf." It sometimes seems that after CIA gets the intelligence it does not know what to do with it. One high defense leader, for example, so distrusts CIA that he relies on British intelligence. This is hardly a good advertisement for the kind of front-line agency we need, and seems to imply that the CIA has become a sort of albatross around the Administration's neck. Added to this is the fact that the director, Rear Admiral Roscoe H. Hillenkoetter, is known to be anxious to return to his military career. How can the CIA develop stability and continuity under these circumstances?

Only a nonpolitical civilian of national standing, and a man devoid of outside ambitions and of devotion to the military hierarchy, can give CIA the necessary leadership that the country's security requires. Such persons exist, and the President ought to be looking now for the best qualified man to appoint when Admiral Hillenkoetter leaves. Central Intelligence is peculiarly an agency that must be taken on faith, since there is no public scrutiny of its activities. It is the responsibility of the President and the National Security Council to make sure that that faith is justified. If they are proved negligent or wrong, it will be too late to do anything about it. The task has been shirked in spite of repeated reminders that it is overdue.

Gen. Muir S. Fairchild

In the death of Gen. Muir S. Fairchild the Air Force and the Nation has lost an officer of unusual caliber. As vice chief of staff "Sandy" Fairchild combined long practical experience in capacities from enlisted man to four-star general with profound intellectual understanding. He was a scholar of his profession, regarded by many as the management "brains" of the Air Force. Although he was only 55 years old, he served as a link between the Air Force's obscure beginnings and its present independence, and his counsel was mellowed by moderation. During the war he made his influence felt on the Combined Chiefs of Staff, where he was a member of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee. He also was an able tactician who before his appointment as the No. 2 Air Force leader helped establish the Air University in its position of prominence. Withal, he was a self-effacing, retiring man whose ideas appeared more often over other men's signatures than over his own. Little known outside his own service, General Fairchild was loved by the men who knew him and left a decided stamp on the Air Force.

Impotent FAO

The inadequacy of the U. N.'s Food and Agriculture Organization has never been made more obvious than by the dreadful report of the Chinese famine which, if it actually kills 30 million people, may well be one of the worst in history. The famine also exposes the fatuousness of FAO's leaders one of whom said, according to the New York Times of June 14, 1949, that "FAO does not share the forebodings expressed by William Vogt and Fairfield Osborn." It would be interesting to know if the spokesman, Sir Herbert Broadley, deputy director general, is still shrugging off such concern.

Isn't it about time for FAO to have something like an adequate budget and not its approximately one-fifth of a cent a year for each person in the world? Isn't it time for something beyond the present piffling FAO program—and a program realistically related to resource conservation and restoration, as well as to population pressures, including their reduction?

Amelioration of such a situation as that in China will inevitably be difficult and must be long range, but until people can be given hope of improvement—however distant—all the verbalization that occupies most of the U. N.'s time, will accomplish nothing toward bringing the world to the goal of peace.

"The Aberrants"

There is an old saying that for everything we do there are two reasons—the good reason and the real reason. Never was this better illustrated than by the State Department's "good reason" for firing homosexuals, a reason, which, I regret to note, you have swallowed whole in your March 17 editorial on the subject.

A homosexual, so the story goes, is more susceptible to blackmail than anyone else, and agents of foreign powers might intimidate him into delivering secret documents. What astounds me is that you should fall for this bit of exotic mumbo-jumbo when the real reason is so plain. The State Department had to throw a healthy number of its employes to the wolves as "bad security risks" in order to pacify Congress. They had fired everyone they could cook up anything on, yet had to find some more "security risks" somewhere. And where could be found a more likely set of victims than the feared and hated homosexuals?

Clearly, all men but the wealthy can be bribed and any married man with dependents is particularly subject to several kinds of pressure. At a moment of severe financial stress he may be bribed. Or the safety of his children may be vaguely threatened. Or a "Mata Hari" may threaten to run to his wife with stories—whether true or false—of his infidelity. The homosexual, however, is usually a bachelor, without dependents, and in the last analysis can thumb his nose at any form of pressure. The State Department, if it fears blackmail and bribery of its employes, should logically begin firing all employes who are married, have children, and are constantly in a corner financially. I am, of course, not advocating seriously that this should be done, but am merely trying to illustrate a point.

As a matter of fact an espionage agent could probably effectively pry information loose simply by threatening to denounce a Government employe as a "subversive." The accused, of course, would be protected and the employe fired on suspicion, etc. So terror breeds terror.

Your editorial also made the point that a homosexual in the Government will, in hiring new employes—favor other homosexuals. This precept is also true, of course, in the case of Negroes, Jews, Democrats, Harvard men, and former journalists.

The thing that disturbs me the most about the State Department's new "policy" is not the spectacle of the hounds once again baying after the rabbit nor the slimy fakery of the department's conduct, but the fact that the policy tends to be dragnet in character. It now becomes dangerous to invite a homosexual to your home even though his conduct be entirely innocent, or to eat lunch in a cafeteria with a fellow employe known to be under suspicion of "emotional aberration."

Guilt By Association

I find the indignation about "guilt by association" on your editorial page and by Messrs. Childs and Block both stupid and amusing.

Any person who consistently has been a member of organizations labeled by the Attorney General as subversive or who counts subversives among his friends and associates shows that he or she likes that sort of company or that he or she is gullible. I do not see why anybody in public or private life should object to being judged by his or her associates.

Incidentally, are not many of the people who are screaming about the present "witch hunt" the same ones who had a field day at the expense of Colonel Lindbergh when he was entertained by Herman Goering? It has since come out that Colonel Lindbergh's association with this man was for the purpose of getting information on Germany's air strength and the information which he gathered proved of great value to this country. I have not seen any of his detractors hitting the trail to the mourners bench.

Phone Strikebreaking

The telephone company has sunk to a new low in its current attempt to break a phone strike even before it happens. One by one, employes are being "interviewed" by their boss. We're told that we'd better not go on strike at the end of our present truce or we won't have any jobs when the strike is over.

If we honor picket lines—or go out on strike ourselves—management tells us it will take our jobs away from us and that even if we get a job again after the strike, we will lose all our seniority and other benefits.

Heaven knows, wages of telephone workers need improvement. We're interested in seeing that wages and working conditions are improved. If it takes a strike to get that improvement, then strike we will, despite the company's union-busting.

I understand that these management interviews are being held under the "free speech" provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. If that is the case, Congress sure gave the company a powerful club to wave over our heads. This looks more like a coercion to me.

"Belgian King"

Your March 16 editorial, "Belgian King," truly states that instead of abandoning the Allies in the retreat of May, 1940, Leopold was in fact abandoned by them. You then imply that "resentment, stubbornness and ego" prevent him from giving up claim to his throne—now his throne by a majority of the people's vote, and agreeing to the ascension of his brother or his son.

"Stubbornness and ego" are prime condiments in what makes courage—and Albert, father of Leopold, had his share of both. "Resentment never came to him for he was never faced with such a decision as was forced upon his son. Albert fought and delayed the German hordes, through August of 1914 but he knew the armies of England and of France were rushing to his support.

As for Leopold, when his hour came he knew only that England and France were running away from him. For three full weeks, after Holland had dropped out, the Belgian army, led by Leopold and forming the north flank of the Allied force, bore the brunt of the German attack. Then he learned that the British would evacuate.

Like the Queen of Holland and the House of Norway, Leopold could have run to England, sat in state as the head of a government-in-exile for four years and returned as King of the Belgians. He chose to surrender because there was only that choice for his people. When he surrendered his army and his people he surrendered himself with them—choosing prison instead of the farce of "heading a government-in-exile."

Miss Kenyon's Opinions

It seems to many of us that you have recently displayed a biased slant, not only in your editorials but in your reporting of the news. For instance: several articles in your paper, as well as on the editorial page, state that Miss Dorothy Kenyon has abundantly proved that she has no Communist sympathies. Other D. C. papers quote Mrs. Kenyon as saying that "there was not a shred of evidence against Alger Hiss."

A person holding Miss Kenyon's quoted opinions seems a poor security risk, as claimed by Senator McCarthy, despite her routine denials of Communist tendencies. As every informed person knows, Communists are advised to deny Communist affiliations and interests when under pressure. Hence it is vitally important to get an overall picture, and The Washington Post merits the confidence of its readers only when the news reported therein includes both sides of the story.

In these perilous days, with Communists in control of over one-third of the earth's surface, it is neither patriotic nor good sense to give aid and comfort to the enemy by minimizing the efforts of our Congressmen to stamp out Communist activities.

ELISABETH McSHERRY, Washington.

Editor's Note: That Miss Kenyon acquitted herself of having any Communist sympathies was acknowledged at the hearing by Senator Hickenlooper himself. Miss Kenyon also denied saying "there was not a shred of evidence against Alger Hiss." She claims to have said that there was not a shred of direct evidence against Hiss except what Chambers said plus the documents which also go back to Chambers.

Lodge-Gossett Amendment

A Communication

IN A series of articles on the so-called Lodge-Gossett amendment to reform our procedure for electing the President and Vice President which appeared recently in The Washington Post, Mr. Walter Lippmann bases himself frankly on the studies of Mr. Lucius Wilmerding, jr., of Princeton and, in effect, adopts his thesis. This thesis consists of two arguments: (1) that the Lodge-Gossett proposal that the electoral vote for President and Vice President shall reflect the popular vote should be rejected; and (2) that in its place should be substituted the Coudert proposal to retain the electoral college and count electoral votes by congressional districts.

The argument against the Lodge-Gossett amendment consists in asserting that it rests on the principle of "proportional representation." It is, therefore, said to be a dangerous proposal because, according to Mr. Wilmerding, it might lead to a "plural executive" and to proportional representation in the selection of members of the legislative bodies. This, I believe, is a fair summary.

It is surprising that, while this is the basic contention on which the whole argument rests, it is in sober truth an argument which must be characterized as fanciful and that, therefore, the subsidiary arguments all fall to the ground. The proposed constitutional amendment has no relation whatever to "proportional representation." It could not have.

The Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences says "the term proportional representation is used to designate the various electoral devices which aim to secure a legislative body reflecting with more or less mathematical exactness the strength of the groups in the electorate." This definition is the accepted one in all the other standard works on government which the Library of Congress has furnished me. Proportional representation cannot be applied to the election of a single official. It is impossible to take one man and divide him up proportionately—or otherwise—and expect him to live.

IT IS on the basis of this error that Mr. Wilmerding makes the argument that the proposed constitutional amendment would lead to a plural executive. It is from this error that Mr. Wilmerding makes the argument, which Mr. Lippmann accepts, that the proposed constitutional amendment might lead to proportional representation in our national legislative body. The basic argument being untrue, these other contentions obviously collapse. As a matter of fact the term "proportional representation" could be as logically applied to the Coudert proposals as it could to the one which I am sponsoring, inasmuch as congressional districts are allotted in proportion to population. Actually it applies to neither.

Anyone who looks at the Lodge-Gossett proposal can see for himself that there is not one word in it about a plural executive or about choosing legislative bodies by proportional representation. If the time comes that the American people want to have three Presidents instead of one or if the time comes that they want to choose their Congress by proportional representation, they can certainly do so by amending the Constitution. Personally, I would oppose both of these ideas. But there is nothing in the pending proposal which in any way relates to such a prospect and to infer that it does must cast grave doubt on the merit of the argument of him who makes it—particularly when this play on words emanates from such a distinguished academic source as Mr. Lucius Wilmerding, jr., who certainly must know what the phrase "proportional representation" accurately means.

THE SECOND part of the argument is in favor of the Coudert proposal for retaining the electoral college but for having the electors chosen by congressional districts. I say candidly that the Coudert proposal is better than the system which we now have because it would count the electoral vote more nearly in proportion to the popular vote. It is a pity that Mr. Lippmann and Mr. Wilmerding were not equally candid in recognizing the defects of the Coudert proposal which are that most congressional districts are very seriously gerrymandered so that they do not constitute a representative slice of American life and that the Coudert proposal retains the unpledged elector who is one of the evils of the present system. We need look no further than the 1948 election to see the dangers of electors who brazenly disregard the popular will.

To sum up: the argument made against the Lodge-Gossett proposal is based on the fallacy that it rests on proportional representation, which is clearly impossible. The argument in favor of the Coudert amendment, while it fails to mention some of its serious defects, nevertheless does establish it as an improvement over our present method. The Lodge-Gossett proposal, however, is in my view even better because it not only corrects the most serious dangers of existing electoral procedure, but also provides the closest possible reflection of the popular will and would extend and fortify the operations of our two-party system.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Acheson Or His Successor

THE PRESIDENT must be looking for a way to restore a measure of confidence and some national unity in the conduct of foreign affairs.

Lippmann

That cannot be done by an unending series of rebuttals to meet an unending series of allegations. It is always difficult to prove a negative, and in meeting the kind of attack which Senator McCarthy is carrying on the Administration is in the position of having to prove that it has a perfect record.

In a free society like our own, where people have never been regimented, and have taken it for granted that they can say what they think and associate with anyone they choose, it is impossible to prove that everyone employed by the Government has always thought all the right thoughts and associated only with the right people.

THE SITUATION is one which it is not easy to resolve under our system of government. For there is no obvious and accepted procedure by which Secretary Acheson can compel the Congress to render a responsible judgment on himself. There is nothing in our practice which enables him to do what he so clearly needs to do, — namely to ask a vote of confidence, to ask the Republicans and the Democrats to stand up and be counted as to whether they will support him or whether they wish him to resign.

Yet he canont carry on much longer unless he has the support of his own party and a certain amount of tolerance and respect from the opposition. No human being can think clearly and effectively under such virulent and persistent personal attack. And no Secretary of State can hope to deal successfully with our allies, with the undecided and wavering peoples, and with the Soviet opposition, if his standing at home is so deeply challenged.

THE REAL problem confronting the President turns on the fact that to let Mr. Acheson resign under this assault, without a vindication of the Department of State, would mean that his successor had—apart from the special complication of the Hiss case—to carry the same burden of allegations. If anyone doubts this, let him name a man qualified for the post who could command bipartisan support. If there is such a man available, he is badly needed now.

MY OWN hunch is that while a new Secretary may be needed, he will not prosper easily or for very long until the Administration and the people recognize that events have caused a crisis in United States foreign policy. The assault on Acheson does not spring from his own personal vulnerability alone but chiefly from the shock and dismay of the diplomatic defeats which we have suffered during the past year: from the collapse of the Truman Doctrine of Containment in China, the disunity of the Atlantic Alliance, the revival of Germany, and the grave disequilibrium in the balance of military power caused by the Soviet achievement of the atomic bomb.

Because the critical policies of the State Department are in jeopardy, the personnel of the State Department is subject to a general lack of confidence in its capacity to lead the Nation through this dangerous period. The basic problems of our foreign policy at this time being unsolved, those who would wish to support the Administration are silenced and are at a loss while the irresponsible opposition runs wild looking for scapegoats. Because Mr. Acheson has not got policies which deal successfully with the formidable power of Russia, the McCarthys are able to get a hearing for the accusation that he and his department are infiltrated by Communists.

THE REAL trouble, however, is that the department has not been infiltrated by enough men who are able to measure correctly the limits of American power and influence, and to shape our policies and our commitments accordingly. We have become so overextended, we have promised so much more than we can fulfill, we have demanded so much more than we can enforce, we have used words that are so much bigger than our deeds: now we are in the backwash and reaction, which is always painful and embarrassing, of being forced to live internationally within our means.

The strongest Secretary of State will not find that an agreeable experience. But the budget of our foreign commitments has become gravely unbalanced, and if we are not able to take the decisions which will balance it, events which we shall not control will do that in spite of us.

Rising Unemployment

By Marquis Childs

Cloud On The Horizon

THE ECONOMIC prophets have so often been confounded in this strange postwar era that the level of public belief is pretty low. It began with the economic prognosticators who predicted while the war was still on that there would be eight million to nine million unemployed within a few months after VJ-Day.

Childs

The latest figure—for February—is 4,700,000. It is expected to be considerably higher for this month. But that will not necessarily reflect any serious rise in the number of jobless. The March total will include many who were made idle by the prolonged coal strike.

That is one weakness of the statistical method now used to arrive at the monthly figure. Another weakness is that it does not reflect partial employment.

For the long pull, what most economists foresee is a steady creeping upward of the jobless figure. In this connection a significant speech made before a business group in Chicago by Leon Keyserling, acting chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, was too generally overlooked in the news.

Keyserling talked about this creeping unemployment in relation to the Nation's levels of production. He pointed out that 1948 was the most productive year the Nation has ever had. Much of the talk of the future has been in terms of trying to sustain that level.

Yet, according to Keyserling, if that level is maintained, there will be 10 million to 12 million unemployed by 1954. With this as a springboard, he developed his favorite thesis that only by expanding the economy to provide many more jobs is there real hope of preventing this creeping blight.

KEYSERLING assigned two main reasons for the steady upward climb of men and women out of work. One is the increasing rate of production per man hour. This makes it possible to produce more and more goods with fewer and fewer people. During the period of retooling and boomtime prosperity immediately after the war, the drive to increase production by efficiency and new machinery was not so important.

The chief reason, of course, is the number of young people who each year come into the labor market. What is happening to an increasing degree is that these young people are finding jobs. But they are pushing men of 45 or 50 out of work and these older men find it all but impossible to get new jobs. Here is the hard core of unemployment that promises to grow under the rigidities of our industrial system.

The jobless figure for June or July is almost certain to go over five million, according to Government economists. The ranks will be swollen by hundreds of thousands of high school and college graduates. Some will be only temporarily unemployed, since they will return to school in the fall.

THIS suggests, of course, some interesting political sidelights. When the total passes the five-million mark, there is bound to be an outcry. That will call to mind the dreary '30s, when mass unemployment ranging up to 10 million had come almost to be taken for granted.

The party in power will be belabored by the Republican opposition. You can hear now how those speeches will sound—all this Government spending, deficit spending, yet in spite of it five million out of work. It will be an effective form of political attack.

But the expectation of the economists is that the figure will drop below the five million mark again in late September or October. This may serve to take off the immediate political heat in relation to the November elections.

It will not, however, resolve the problem of creeping unemployment. Keyserling's estimate is that at 1948 levels of productivity industry will fall short by 3 to 4 percent a year of providing a sufficient number of jobs. In 1948 the average of unemployed to employed was 1.8 percent. In 1949, when output was only about 1 percent below the level of the previous year, unemployment was 3.5 percent of employment.

Short of a war, this will put the problem squarely into the 1952 campaign. By that time the level would be six to seven million. For many of the older jobless, unemployment benefits and savings would have long since been exhausted. They would constitute an articulate, not to say a vociferous, minority pushing for drastic governmental remedies. That may seem a long way off. But it is already a cloud on the horizon.

ures show the city's population at 867,000 police here have "to deal with" the population of the entire metropolitan area, about 1,420,000 persons. In addtion, Barrett said, an estimated 45,600,000 people come to Washington each year (124,931 a day) via railroad, plane, bus or private car.

Barrett also said that "our crime reporting system is the best in the United States" and "we report everything — we go further than most cities."

Asked to comment on the city's rank for assaults, the police chief said:

"An assault tonight is another story in the morning. The story told in court next day may be only a family argument. But it goes on the books as an assault."

Barrett said there is "nothing alarming" about the city's top rank in assaults.

Washington's metropolitan area is now estimated to be the ninth or tenth largest in the Nation. The Board of Trade's Great National Capital Committee said yesterday it estimates about four million pleasure visitors came to Washington last year.

The FBI report revealed that in 1949 crime in general was 4.5 percent higher throughout the Nation than in 1948; that a major crime was committed every 18 seconds; yet there was a decline in the number of murders.

Crime in rural areas reported rose 8.5 percent compared to an urban area increase of 4.2 percent, according to the report, released by FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover. The entire United States is not covered, however.

In an average 1949 day in the Nation 1100 places were burglarized, 293 persons were feloniously killed or assaulted; there were 162 robberies, 2800 other thefts and 440 cars stolen.

The FBI figures showed that youth played a predominant part in crime against property. Of the persons charged with robbery, embezzlement, burglary, larceny, auto theft, fraud, forgery, counterfeiting, receiving stolen property and arson, 27.4 percent were less than 21 years old, Hoover noted.

The predominant age among persons arrested for all causes was 21. Persons under 25 made up 54.1 percent of those charged with robbery, 59.5 percent of those charged with burglary, 44.8 of those charged with larceny and 67.0 of those charged with auto theft, yet of all arrests those under 25 represented 31.2 percent.

Mayor Quits Chevy Chase Village Post

Arthur W. Defenderfer, "mayor" of Chevy Chase Village, resigned yesterday after 17 years on the board of managers.

Defenderfer

Chairman of the board for 15 years, Defenderfer lives at 7 E. Kirke st., in the heart of the incorporated community with the New England town-meeting form of government.

Arthur G. Lambert, 7 Grafton st., Chevy Chase, a board vice-chairman, will serve as "mayor" until a new chairman is appointed April 17.

Defenderfer submitted his resignation last year but was persuaded to stay on to complete plans for expansion of the Chevy Chase Postoffice in the combination community building, town headquarters at 5900 Connecticut ave.

Excavation for the $18,000 Post Office addition started yesterday.

Defenderfer is general agent of the John Hancock Life Insurance Co., chairman of the board of Woodward School at the YMCA, and former president of the Cosmopolitan Club.

The retiring "mayor" said the village was free from politics and debt and "few communities if any have given their people so much for their tax dollar."

Approximately 3000 persons live in some 550 homes, assessed at more than six million dollars in the village, and support special maintenance crews, a town manager and a police department.

Seafaring Unions Sign Pact in Fight For Hiring Halls

By The Associated Press

Seven seafaring unions of the CIO, AFL and independent status signed a mutual aid pact yesterday to fight for retention of their union hiring halls.

A two-day meeting began yesterday at the invitation of Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union, the organization of CIO sailors.

In a joint statement signed by the heads of the seven unions, Communists and other "splinter groups" were attacked as "trying to destroy our union hiring practices in order to further their international disruption, by invoking the anti-labor features of the Taft-Hartley Act."

Excluded from the meeting were Harry Bridges' West Coast International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, and the Marine Cooks and Stewards, both accused by the CIO of following the Communist Party program.

Man's Heart Beats 5½ Hours After Breaking Stops

New Orleans, March 20 (U.P.).—Evest Billiot's heart beat on today for five and a half hours after he stopped breathing.

Physicians at Charity Hospital, where he was pronounced dead when his heart stopped, said they had seen a heart outlast lungs in the same body about two hours, but none so long as Billiot's.

Billiot, 47, and his uncle Oristile, 64, were hit by an automobile at 1:20 a. m. on Magazine st. He suffered a fracture at the base of his skull. Blood seeped into vital centers of his brain and at 4 a. m., while surgeons were working over him, the center that controlled his breathing was knocked out. His lungs stopped working.

The surgeons put a rubber tube down Billiot's throat into his lungs and pumped oxygen into the tube. Thus, his blood was at least partly oxygenated. Without the oxygen, he would have died much sooner.

Denfeld Still Expects Carrier Will Be Built

New York, March 20 (AP).—Adm. Louis E. Denfeld predicted today the U. S. eventually will build a super aircraft carrier of the type abandoned last year after plans for its construction had gone forward.

Denfield, replaced as chief of naval operations during the recent unification squabble, said "the navy had the best interests of the country at heart and I feel sure that one of these days it will still be built."

"We put in it everything we learned in World War II," he declared.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, March 20 (AP).—The high-flying soybean contracts again whirled upward on the board of trade today.

Beans ended on gains extending to more than 4 cents, set another string of new seasonal highs and generally carried the rest of the market upward with them.

All bean deliveries except November scored new seasonal highs. So did all corn contracts as well as March and May oats. May wheat equalled its seasonal peak. Feature of trading was the lack of selling pressure, which was more noticeable than any urgent buying.

Wheat closed 1¾-2⅛ higher, corn was ⅛-1⅛ higher, oats were ¼ lower to ⅝ higher, rye was ⅛-¾ higher, soybeans were 2¾-4⅛ higher and lard was 10 to 15 cents 100 pounds higher.

GMAC to Raise $225 Million In New Capital

New York, March 20 (AP).—General Motors Acceptance Corp. announced plans today to raise up to $225,000,000 in new capital to meet anticipated demands for installment financing in the near future.

GMAC, which finances installment sales of General Motors automobiles, household appliances and other products, said its action was necessitated, "not so much because of the number of units being financed as because of today's higher price levels."

The financing, it said, would take this form: $25,000,000 of 3¾ percent cumulative preferred stock to be sold to the parent General Motors Corp.; $25,000,000 in subordinated notes to be sold to the same group of insurance companies that took a $75,000,000 issue last fall; sale to a limited number of national banks of up to $175,000,000 of 5-year, 2¾ percent debentures, of which approximately 30 percent will be taken up within the next 30 days.

Week's Steel Rate Near 12-Month Top

New York, March 20 (AP).—The biggest steel tonnage in nearly a year is scheduled to roll from the nation's mills this week.

Total output for the week was estimated today at 1,820,500 net tons of steel ingots and castings by the American Iron and Steel Institute. This would be the highest since the week of April 11, 1949.

The institute said the industry, recovering from effects of the coal shortage, is lifting operations this week to 95.5 percent of its rated capacity, from 89.8 percent last week. Production last week was estimated at 1,711,800 tons.

A month ago the industry operated at 88.8 percent to turn out 1,692,800 tons. The rate a year ago was 101.1 percent and output 1,863,800 tons.

Seaboard Cuts Its Round-Trip Fare to Miami

A 25-percent reduction in both coach and pullman southbound round-trip fares from Washington will go into effect on the Seaboard Air Line Railroad May 1, Edward Plack, assistant general passenger agent of the line here, said yesterday.

Plack said the new prices, good for 30 days from May 1 to November 15, will facilitate travel for the "many thousands" of persons who may want to vacation at some point between Washington and Florida during the period.

A sample of the saving, as pointed out by Plack, would be $14.06 on a round trip coach fare from here to Miami (present fare $56.26; new fare, $42.20) and $20.21 on a round trip pullman fare (present fare, $80.96; new fare, $60.75).

Plack said the reduction will apply to all points served by the Seaboard, beginning with Petersburg, Va., from Washington, and also will apply between all points located on the railroad.

Sidwell Friends Building Fund Reaches $86,950

A total of $86,950 has been contributed to the Sidwell Friends School building fund, it was announced yesterday by Thomas L. Eagan, chairman of the drive to raise $570,000 for building construction.

The funds are for construction of a school building to take the place of the historic Grayson mansion adjoining the school property at 3901 Wisconsin ave. nw., as well as a gymnasium and kindergarten.

Eagan's announcement was made at the first report luncheon of the campaign committee, held yesterday at the Willard Hotel. The total reported includes $75,765 in special gifts and $11,185 solicited by the committee.

Billion-Dollar Cut for ECA

surplus commodity, or in any particular quantity.

Would Head Off Floor Fight

Vorys defended his plan to reporters by saying it would head off attempts to slash the third-year ECA authorization on the floor of the House. He also said it would call public attention to the real cost of the price-support program.

"These dollars should no longer be manipulated so as to make European aid appear to cost more and price-support less," Vorys argued. "This year price-support should present its own bill to the taxpayers instead of burying its cost in other Government appropriations."

Chairman Kee thought, on the contrary, that the amendment would actually cost taxpayers more; that the Secretary of Agriculture would have to pay 90 percent of parity for the surplus food, whereas EAC could have bought it for less in the open market.

Hoffman Sees "Straitjacket"

At ECA headquarters here Hoffman declared the amendment would put him in a "straitjacket." He predicted that the new plan would cause administrative difficulties, but said he would have to study it carefully before giving his considered comment.

He pointed out that CCC did not actually have physical possession of many surplus items, which have been held in farmers' bins and warehouses. He said, too, that he couldn't tell to what extent the CCC holdings corresponded to ECA's needs.

If western Europe needed farm products that were not surplus, he said, ECA would have to use its shrunken cash for such food items instead of for machinery and other industrial recovery supplies.

In general, ECA officials disliked the new amendment for at least three reasons: (1) it would drive private American exporting firms out of the present trade in ECA-financed farm shipments; (2) it would take flexibility out of an important part of the Marshall Plan program; and (3) it would have a bad psychological effect in linking the Marshal Plan by law with the disposal of farm surpluses.

For these reasons, if for no others, officials are expected to fight adoption of a similar amendment in the Senate, in the hope that the ensuing Senate-House conference will kill the House version. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee meets in executive session today to deal with the ECA bill.

Fresh Cabbage Juice Suggested For Peptic Ulcers

Washington, Feb. 13.—The above heading appeared in an (AP) newspaper article which reads as follows: A remarkable speedup in the healing of peptic ulcers when treated with new cabbage juice was reported today by a California scientist.

In the first test of its kind on human beings, 31 patients, some with ulcers of long standing, received the cabbage juice treatment. Each drank about a quart of juice daily. In 11 cases the ulcers disappeared in six to nine days, said the scientist. He reported the tests in California Medicine, an official journal. One case required 23 days of treatment.

The tests indicate, but do not prove, the scientist said, that raw cabbage juice contains an unidentified substance which plays "a specific role in the healing of peptic ulcers."

Pure fresh cabbage juice may be had in Washington from the Vita Food Co. at 503 12th st. nw., or 3040 14th st. nw., or at the C & O Food Store, 519 11th st. nw., CO. 2980.

Day Clinic Started For Mentally Ill

A pioneer treatment plan providing hospital day care for only mentally ill has been inaugurated at the famed Menninger Clinic, in Topeka, Kansas.

The new program, called the Day Hospital, offers all-day hospital care for those who do not need—and in many cases cannot afford—a hospital bed or room.

Besides the economic factor, the plan has therapeutic value, according to Dr. Fred M. Tetzlaff, the program director. It gives the patients a chance to test the outside world somewhat gradually while still offering them the controlled environment of the hospital during most of their waking hours.

Day Hospital patients participate in all the occupational, recreational, educational and social activities of the clinic, including its evening events. They may sleep, however, in a downtown hotel, apartment, home, or room in a private home in Topeka. The plan costs the patients between one-third and one-half what fulltime hospitalization would cost, the director said.

It is especially designed for the middle income group, Dr. Tetzlaff said. These are those patients with too high financial resources to receive free treatment and too little income to afford private sanitarium rates.

Objects to Church

Fairfield, Iowa., March 20 (U.P.)—City Solicitor Ralph H. Munro has asked a court injunction to prevent construction of a church next door to his house. He said churchgoers would annoy and inconvenience his family. Munro contended that when he sold a lot to E. A. Martin in 1946 they agreed that the property would be used only for residential purposes.

Greenbelt Woman Gives Free Art Classes . . .

The Washington Post

Mrs. Sari Shiren, a diminutive artist with a flair for creative work, isn't at all selfish about her talents.

In fact she's so anxious to impart her knowledge to others she has taken under her wing a group of 65 future sculptors who comprise the city of Greenbelt's first free art school for children. Not only has she accepted the instructional chores, but she has turned her home over to the school for classes held every day, Monday through Friday, from 4 to 5 p. m.

Her 65 pupils, ranging in age from 8 to 16, attend classes in groups of 13, which means that each child receives an hour of instruction each week. Although the school has been organized only a month, the classes already have produced some art objects worthy of exhibit, Mrs. Shiren said yesterday.

Although she had to give them the "know-how" to start with, Mrs. Shiren disclaims credit for their progress. Their work is entirely creative, she insists, and each object of sculpture is the product of a pupil's imagination and natural ability.

To begin with, she said, she showed her pupils how to make moulds and how to use the Italian modeling clay, liquid rubber and other materials required for small-scale sculpture. From then on, they were on their own, with their instructor serving as general supervisor and offering only an occasional suggestion.

Objects produced to date include a variety of small animals, flowers, pottery, an occasional bust. Later, Mrs. Shiren said the class will be taught to make larger objects and eventually the curriculum will be expanded to include oil painting.

Although the school is primarily for the children's benefit, she admits "I get a little fun out of it, too."

The daughter of a sculptor, Mrs. Shiren attended the New York Art Students League and maintained a studio in New York City before coming to Greenbelt in 1943. Although she has conducted previous classes for both children and adults in Greenbelt, this is her first free school, in which pupils pay nothing more than the cost of materials used.

Her home—and the school—are at 1-C Laurel Hill rd., Greenbelt.

Death Claims Cost Company $269 Million

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company last year paid out $269 million in death claims, of which more than half were from deaths due to heart diseases.

The company's recently released statistical breakdown of death claim payments also showed that payments in cancer deaths totalled $45,601,000, about 17 percent of the year's total.

For deaths attributed to chronic diseases of the heart and blood vessels, the 1949 payments totaled $139,175,000. Polio death claims totaled $741,000, or more than twice as much as in 1948 and 1946, other recent epidemic years.

Though the total paid out in death claims for all causes combined increased by almost 60 percent from 1939 to 1949, company statisticians noted, the payments for tuberculosis deaths were 20 percent lower and penumonia and influenza deaths 40 percent lower last year than 10 years ago.

About one of every ten dollars paid out was for deaths from external causes. Accidents accounted for $21,304,000; suicides, $4,928,000, and homicide deaths totaled $1,326,000.

Britain Buys 40% of Surplus Dried Eggs

Announcement will be made at 10 a. m. today that the Commodity Credit Corp. has sold about 40 percent of its enormous stock of surplus dried eggs to Britain.

The announcement was planned for yesterday, but withheld because the British wished to make it simultaneously in London.

The amount involved is reported to be 31 million pounds. The Government has almost 76 million pounds on hand, much of it stored in a limestone cave at Atchison, Kan. The 76 million pounds cost the Government slightly more than 98 million dollars.

A pound of eggs represents three dozen. The United Kingdom quit purchasing dried eggs several months ago due to a shortage of dollars.

Although the CCC, which conducts the surplus commodities program for the Government, has permission to sell the eggs at giveaway prices, it was stated last night that the British are paying a substantial sum. One report was that the price would net about 40 percent the cost of the 31 million pounds to Uncle Sam, or around 50 cents a pound. The cost to CCC was about $1.20 a pound.

Meantime the National Potato Council promised yesterday to try to sell potato growers on accepting strict production controls in order to retain Government price supports. Council members testified before a Senate committee considering strict Government-enforced regulations on potato production beginning next January.

The council opposed a trial run of the Brannan Plan on potatoes. It urged higher penalties than the Government proposed for violation of marketing quotas, and asked for higher duties on imports from Canada. It also asked that Congress set up a potato advisory board to advise the Secretary of Agriculture.

saving of $83,000 was realized. This was applied to the cookbook.

The new book takes the place of Agriculture's famous Aunt Sammy's Radio Cookbook of prewar days. Congress distributed millions of that book in the 10 years before the war. It cost 30 cents a copy.

The new book tells how to cook, and also how to plan and serve different dishes and how to buy food. It also has a chapter on diets with the caloric record of each food.

Also, it doesn't mention two famous commodities, butter or margarine. When recipes require such items it calls them "cooking fat."

Hume School Contract Let In Arlington

The contract was awarded last night for Arlington's Hume School, subject of controversy for two years.

A bid of $346,731 by the firm of Allen C. Minnix & Sons, 216 C st. nw., was the lowest of nine, running as high as $407,000. Bids were opened by School Superintendent William A. Early and members of the school board.

The school, to be located on an eight-acre site on S. 24th st., between Ode and Nash sts., is scheduled for completion within 180 days of the contract signing, expected this week.

The building will contain, in addition to classrooms, a library, a multipurpose room, kitchen, clinic and offices. Facilities exist for the addition of eight classrooms, if needed.

Money to building the school was originally voted in a May, 1947, bond issue.

Californians to Vote On Legalized Gambling

This means California's voters will have a chance to vote whether to legalize gambling and set up a five-man commission to control it.

Abortion Case Postponed By Holtzoff

The abortion-death trial of Ralph W. Myers, 44, was postponed yesterday in District Court until Wednesday morning.

Judge Alexander Holtzoff granted the two-day delay after Defense Attorney James J. Laughlin was refused a longer postponement before the United States Court of Appeals.

Judge Holtzoff said that he would grant a short postponement because Laughlin said he was not ready to go to trial immediately. The jurist said he did not want to injure Myers' chances.

Myers is charged with attempting an abortion operation which allegedly caused the death of Mrs. Nina C. Campbell, 20-year-old mother of two children last January.

Even the COLORS sing of Spring!

Too bad a newspaper has to be printed in black and white.

For here we can show you only half the picture you can make this spring, this summer and for a long time to come.

True, you can see the lines of this tidy 1950 SUPER Convertible.

You can, perhaps, imagine the top-of-the-world feeling you'd know with the wind combing your hair, a great valve-in-head straight-eight filling your ears with its song, these spinning wheels cradling each mile of your going in soft, coil-spring comfort.

What we can't show you here are the bright, gay colors we have made ready just for you and just for this year.

We can't show you how they dress you up, clothe you in the very spirit of the season, add their own special plus to that unmatchable I-drive-a-Buick feeling.

Best we can say is they won't cost you one cent extra.

They are part and parcel of this gorgeous Buick package, like the Fireballing power of our new F-263 engine—the level going of all-coil springing—the steady roadability of Buick's solid structure—the handy controls for top, windows and front seat, the satiny smoothness of Dynaflow Drive.*

Why not come see the whole package for yourself? Your Buick dealer can get right down to cases—prices, trade-in, terms and all.

See him—and this year you'll want to meet spring in the gay Buick manner.

*Standard on all ROADMASTER models, optional equipment at extra cost on SPECIALS and SUPERS.

ONLY BUICK HAS Dynaflow

AND WITH IT GOES: HIGHER-COMPRESSION Fireball valve-in-head power in three engines. (New F-263 engine in SUPER models.) • NEW-PATTERN STYLING, with bumper-guard grilles, taper-through fenders, "double bubble" taillights • WIDE-ANGLE VISIBILITY, close-up road view both forward and back • TRAFFIC-HANDY SIZE, less over-all length for easier parking and garaging, short turning radius • EXTRA-WIDE SEATS cradled between the axles • SOFT BUICK RIDE, from all-coil springing, Safety-Ride rims, low-pressure tires, ride-steadying torque-tube • WIDE ARRAY OF MODELS with Body by Fisher.

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

SARASOTA, FLA., MARCH 20.—The Tigers, with the league's top pitching staff, plus a whizz-kid outfield, plus the peerless George Kell at third base, are being tabbed as the team that could take it all in the American League pennant race.

It's a prediction that has merit which is properly recognized by the Yankees, the Red Sox and the Indians who had the race pretty much to themselves last year. The Tigers are an improved ball club, or ought to be, and that is sufficient to cause the others some concern.

POVICH

Red Rolfe, the old Yankee who manages the Tigers, solved his second base problem over the winter with one stroke—of Owner Walter Briggs' pen. Briggs wrote out a $125,000 check to the Browns and delivered to Rolfe the second baseman of his choice, Jerry Priddy.

Their other winter deal brought to the Tigers a first baseman that was lacking. It merely required the abandonment of all faith in the future of Dick Wakefield as a big league outfielder. Wakefield's release to the Yankees fetched Dick Kryhoski, Yankee property, who hit .328 in the Coast League.

ROLFE IS QUITE, if not completely pleased, with the Tigers' prospects. He's quite unperturbed by the failure of Priddy to hit in the Grapefruit League games and says, "I know enough about Priddy to have no worries. He always has been a great ball player and the champion spring training camp bum. It's a comfort to know that."

About Kryhoski, he's not quite as sure, although he sees the fellow as an asset to the Tigers. "I knew when we bought him that Dick wasn't very graceful around that bag," he says. "But he's not as clumsy as he looks. And up there at the plate there's nothing awkward about him."

There's a dissident school of thought in the Tigers' camp about Kryhoski, though. And even a mild sign of dissension. The situation has left Don Kolloway a somewhat disgruntled young man. He is the second baseman who stepped in at first base for the Tigers last season when they could turn to nobody else, and did a magnificent job of it, only to be side-tracked this year in favor of Kryhoski.

KOLLOWAY, a second baseman all his life, is a better first baseman than Kryhoski despite his newness to the trade. He hit .294 for the Tigers last year, and he'll stack that figure against the .328 Kryhoski hit against Coast League pitching. Kolloway can be forgiven for holding a doubt that the Tigers have improved themselves at first base.

Rolfe's chief worries are two, (1) the weak-armed Johnny Lipon at shortstop, and (2) the lack of a competent relief pitcher. Lipon gets to a ball nicely, and is no push-over at the plate, but too many plays get away from him. Rolfe may yet be forced to draft Connie Berry, last year's second baseman, for the shortstop job. Berry, defensively, is adequate. But he can't hit with Lipon.

The Tigers' pitching is something of a paradox. He's overloaded with solid starters like Virgil Trucks, Hal Newhouser, Fred Hutchinson, Ted Gray and Art Houtteman. And underset in the relief department. Dizzy Trout, who could pitch relief, demands a starting job else he won't have his heart in his work. The Tigers are distressed in that department to the point where they've taken on Paul Calvert, who undistinguished himself with the Nats last season.

OF COURSE, what Rolfe has going for him is the diminishing unimportance of relief pitching for a starting staff that is so deep in solid men. He reckons he'll get more complete games out of his pitchers than any club in the league will get from theirs.

And Rolfe suspects also that his pitching will be a heap better than it was last season. The Tigers were without Art Houtteman until mid-June, and from that point the rugged young right-hander bounced back from an automobile mishap and won 15 games for the club. The only reason that Virgil Trucks, who led the league in strikeouts, wasn't a 20-game winner was because he didn't pitch a game during the month of August after turning his ankle in Washington.

It's when he scans his outfield that Rolfe perhaps is happiest. It's there that he sees Vic Wertz, Hoot Evers and Johnny Groth, the slickest-fielding, best-throwing trio in the league. Groth didn't hit .300 last season, but he will, Rolfe is certain. Rolfe's admiration for that Tiger outfield is matched by the Detroit pitchers—at least, it would be if they expressed themselves honestly.

Knicks 6-Point Choice

Underdog Caps Open Playoffs With New York Here Tonight

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

The Caps open a three-game NBA Eastern Division playoff series with New York at Uline Arena tonight and they aren't expected to survive the first round.

Second-place New York, winner of five of six previous meetings, figures to be about a six-point favorite here.

Even if the Caps win, they have to go to New York for the next two games, scheduled tomorrow night and Saturday afternoon at Madison Square Garden.

Missing from Washington's lineup will be burly Chuck Gilmur, out with a severely sprained ankle.

New York's high-scoring Carl Braun and Dick McGuire, classy floorman who set a league record for assists with 386, should give the Caps most of their trouble.

Braun has averaged 20 points against Washington and McGuire has scored well, too. Ernie Vandeweghe, former Colgate ace who's studying medicine at Columbia, won't make the trip with the Knicks because of examinations.

Player-Coach Bob Feerick is going to start against Braun. If he can't hold him, Feerick said he will put Bones McKinney or Dick O'Keefe on him.

Carrying offensive hopes for the Caps are Don Otten, 7-foot center, Freddie Scolari, team leader, and Chick Reiser, set-shot artist.

New York finished eight full games in front of the Caps with a 40-28 record. Washington's mark was 32-36. The Caps beat them here New Year's Eve, 70-64, after losing by 84-79 and 87-67. Washington lost a 73-72 decision in New York when Braun was held to 14 points then was beaten 76-71 and 89-81 when Braun scored 24 and 38 points, respectively.

Terp Marksmen Win

Middlecoff's 297 Wins at Jacksonville; Fazio Second

Jacksonville, Fla., March 20 (AP)—Cary Middlecoff, the National Open Champion, used his "black widow" putter to win the top $2000 in the Jacksonville Golf Open with a 72-hole score of 279 today.

It was the second straight Jacksonville victory for the Ormond Beach, Fla., professional. He came back with a great 69 today in spite of a shaky start to win going away.

George Fazio of Woodmont Country Club, Washington, D. C., finished with 71 after three straight 70s and was second with 281.

Henry Ransom, of St. Andrews, Ill., was even par 72 for 282 and third money.

Young Jack Burke, of White Plains, N. Y., leader at 54 holes, had a bad 78 and finished six strokes behind Middlecoff.

Jim Ferrier of San Francisco and leading money-winner Sam Snead of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., beat out Burke for fourth place. Snead soared to a 74 for a 284 total.

Middlecoff's famous putter converted a good iron shot into a birdie two on the 190-yard eleventh hole and worked even better on the tough par three sixteenth. There he holed out from among a pile of leaves back of the green.

He almost threw one or more shots away on th seventeenth. His tee shot hit a tree and he knocked a No. 7 iron behind the green. But a No. 9 iron shot put him within a few feet and the "black widow" pulled out a par.

Gene Smith Beats Dynamite

Smith, a 9-5 favorite, weighed 123 to Dynamite's 127.

Dynamite, opened cuts inside Smith's mouth as early as the third round but lacked the solid punch to put Smith away.

Smith used his jab to advantage and was effective at long range, but once Little Dynamite got inside, his weight advantage showed as he cuffed Smith around almost at will.

In the first of three supporting six-rounders, Roland Randall, 173, Washington, knocked out Harvey Jones, 172, Baltimore. It took only 53 seconds of the third for Randall to polish off Jones with a right and left to the jaw.

In other six-rounders Tex Newby, 164½, Baltimore, won a split decision over Holly Mims, 158½ of Washington, and Garland Edwards, 162, Washington, won a TKO over Benny Droll, 162½, of Philadelphia, after 1 minute of the sixth.

Gator Bowl Renewal Set for Sept. 23

Terps Pick a Tough Opener—Georgia

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

MARYLAND and Georgia, 1948 'Gator Bowl opponents, will open their 1950 football seasons against each other September 23 at Athens, Ga.

It will be the first of a four-game home-and-home series between Coach Wally Butts' colorful and usually powerful Bulldogs and Coach Jim Tatum's up-and-coming Terrapins.

Wally Butts

"As football coach, I made a mistake scheduling Georgia," Tatum said yesterday, "because Butts' teams are always strong. As athletic director, however, I think we made one of the most attractive additions to our schedule since I've been here."

The Georgia game completes Maryland's 1950 schedule, giving the Terrapins 10 games, five at College Park and five on the road. To add Georgia to the schedule, Maryland had to shift its traditional opener with V.P.I. to December 2.

The first regular season clash between Georgia and Maryland—they battled to a thrilling 20-20 tie in the 1948 'Gator Bowl—is expected to lure a capacity crowd of 40,000 to Georgia's Sanford Stadium. The two teams will have the state to themselves that day inasmuch as Georgia's arch rival, Georgia Tech, will be at Dallas playing S.M.U.

Addition of Georgia to the Maryland schedule gives the Terps the most representative slate they've ever put together. The opposition includes a Big Ten team, Michigan State; the champions of the Southern Conference, North Carolina; a big name Eastern team, Navy, plus George Washington, Georgetown, N. C. State, Duke, West Virginia and V.P.I.

Jim Tatum

Butts, who has produced such stars as Frankie Sinkwich, and Charley Trippi, had his worst season in 10 years at Georgia in 1949. His Bulldogs, who have been in eight bowl games and lost only one, dropped five of their 10 games, but one of their victories was a 7-0 success over L.S.U., which met Oklahoma in the Sugar Bowl.

The game brings together two of the most colorful characters in college coaching ranks in Butts and Tatum. Butts, the sawed-off little South Georgian, leaped into national prominence by making the jump from high school coach to head man of a college team.

In his third year, he piloted the Bulldogs to the Orange Bowl. Other Georgia Bowl appearances include the Rose Bowl, Sugar Bowl, Oil Bowl, Cotton Bowl and 'Gator Bowl.

Butts, a stickler for conditioning, is a disciple of Notre Dame's Frank Leahy. Except for personnel, of course, Butts' Bulldogs are a carbon copy of Leahy's Irish, employing the same T-formation

Lakeland, Fla., March 20 (AP)—The Detroit Tigers sent 12 men to bat in a big seven-run third inning today as they beat the New York Yankees 9-4 for their second straight win over the World Champions.

George Kells three-run homer was the big wallop of the inning and came off lefthander Eddie Ford, a rookie up from Binghamton, N. Y., who gave up all the Tiger runs in this four innings on the mound.

Starter Saul Rogovin held the Yankees scoreless and allowed only two hits in the first five innings, but six walks and a wild pitch kept him in trouble a lot of the time.

Gavilan Bows To Villemain

Montreal, March 20 (AP).—Robert Villemain, French middleweight contender, tonight won a 10-round decision over Kid Gavilan of Cuba.

The heavier Frenchman, weighing 158 to Gavilan's 149½, made his weight tell as he landed the more powerful blows in the heavy going. Gavilan staged several flurries, particularly in the eighth round, but couldn't match Villemain's power. There were no knockdowns.

Both fighters tired visibly as the bout ended and the tenth round saw few solid punches hit their target.

Harris Holds Old Team to One Hit in Five Innings

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Sarasota, Fla., March 20.—Rookie Dick Weik and Veteran Mickey Harris confronted the Boston Red Sox with, of all things, a three-hit pitching performance today and the Nats, of all things, won a ball game.

They whipped the Red Sox, 8 to 5, before the grateful eyes of Manager Bucky Harris who was beginning to wonder where his next victory was coming from, after three lickings in a row.

It was Left-hander Haris who actually took charge of the ball game for the Nats after replacing the wild-ish Weik at the end of the four innings. Pitching against his ex-boss, Joe McCarthy of whom he is not fond, Harris held the Red Sox to one lonesome hit and a solitary run in the last five innings.

Red Sox Rookies Unimpressive

But on another count, Manager Harris was quite pleased. He saw his athletes accumulate 12 hits today and stage a five-run third inning. The Red Sox pitching was not ultra-fashionable to be sure with a pair of their rookies, Jim Suchecki and Mike Palm working the entire game, but the sound of base hits under any conditions is beginning to delight Harris.

Actually, the Nats collected their winning run in a gift package in the seventh inning, at a time when the score was tied 5-5. Eddie Robinson, who was on third with two out after leading off with a single to right, was balked home by Palm, who looked quite bush when he made a palpably false motion to throw to first base and was quickly penalized by Umpire Passarella.

And then the Nats went out and got two more big runs off Palm in the ninth just to make it emphatic. Sam Mele, another ex-Red Sox, led off with a single to center, Al Kozar scored him with a solid double to left, and Al Evans moved Kozar in with a single to left.

The Nats took an early lead in the battle between the two wild, rookie right-handers, Suchecki and Weik. Suchecki, up from Birmingham, walked three of 'em in the third after Yost led off with a single. Noren singled home one run, another was forced home, and Vollmer and Grasso blasted the other three across with fiery hits.

Back in the second inning, Weik walked the first three batters, and escaped with only one-run damage when Batts grounded into a double play. But his wildness caught up with him painfully in the third when the Sox came up with three runs on only one hit. He walked four men during the inning. Williams' single drove in the first run, and Grasso's wild throw accounted for another. A third scored on Stringer's fly ball.

All told, Weik walked nine in the four innings he toiled, although allowing only one hit. The Washington pitching improved perceptibly with the arrival of Harris on the scene in the fifth.

IN SHORT . . . the left side of the Red Sox infield did not represent their strongest front, with Vern Stephens and Johnny Pesky out of the lineup with injuries . . . Stephens hacked his finger badly while shaving yesterday . . . Mickey Grasso did himself no harm in his bid for the Nats' top catching job, with two solid singles in three times at bat . . . It was a notable afternoon, what with Ted Williams stealing a base, though unintentionally. He started for second under the impression Bobby Doerr had drawn a walk, but Umpire Art Pasarella called the ball a strike with such a vigorous gesture he walked into the throwing arm of Grasso who heaved the ball into center field . . . The Nats hit the road for Orlando after the game, 140 miles distant by bus, to keep a date with an open date tomorrow.

At Charles Town

Dear Folks:

Lest we forget, this track runs until Friday and Laurel opens on Saturday. Laurel has a rule that horses, who have started for less than $1500 since last June, or have not won since for more than that claiming price, are not eligible. However, the Baltimore boulevard oval will draw the majority of the top horses here. As the result of their local activities they should be primed for the big time. An apprentice who should get a lot of work at Laurel is Jimmy McDermott, leading "bug boy" here. Along with Journeyman Jockey Bobby Mitchell, the youngster will be handled by Agent Walter Van. McDermott comes from a family of riders and is a little gentleman.

Filly Pays $6.80 Mutuel In Feature

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town March 20.—E. L. Morsberger's Minaddie, consistent filly during the 1948 campaigning, made her season's debut today and won by 2½ lengths. Her victory came in the Cumberland Purse, featuring the Monday program.

In a tight photo fit for second position, the nod went to J. Solomon's Wise Mahmoud over Sylvia Huyett's Frank's Moose. A field of eight competed in the test of about 4½ furlongs and the winner was clocked in a creditable .50 over a fast track and under cloudy skies.

Minaddie, winner of 6 of 15 starts last year and in the money consistently, returned a $6.80 mutuel as the favorite.

Jockey Don Boston kept Minaddie in front all the way with Frank's Moose doing most of the pressing. The hard luck horses of the race were wise Mahmoud and Snow Passes. Both were moving strongly when they ran out entering the stretch, Wise Mahmoud being at fault.

Making her first start of the year, Grand Actress turned in meeting's best time of 1:19 3/5 for the about 6 furlongs and turned back four rivals. Carrying the colors of W. I. Jones of Baltimore and saddled by C. A. Cranford of Washington, Grand Actress won the fifth event, second best offering on the Monday show and paid $11.60.

An apprentice jockey riding his first winner on any thrack figured in a $188.60 daily double pay-off on the combination of five and six.

Edward (Spike) Sanders, 23-year-old New Oxford, Pa., boy, put the finishing touch on the twin-bet combine by sending his employer's Betty's Bobby into the wire a winner by a half-length. The 13-year-old son of Haste was up in time to defeat C. E. Henry's Phariwin and H. G. Tonkin's Shalam in a field of eight. Betty's Bobby paid $12.40 and was clocked in 1:53 4/5 for the mile and one-sixteenth.

Keller Adds Touch Of Class to Tigers

By Red Smith

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA., March 20 (NYHT).—During the winter the baseball writers in New York had a small dinner for Charley Keller at which, naturally, people got up and said, truthfully and sincerely, that Charley was a great guy and a great ball player.

SMITH

Then Red Rolfe stood up. The former third baseman of the Yankees, a playmate of Keller's on the championship teams of a decade ago, had completed his freshman term as manager of the Tigers and then, following Keller's release by the Yankees in December, he had signed Charley for Detroit. It was not because of their long friendship, he told the diners, that he had hired Keller.

"I signed Charley," he said simply, "to give some class to my ball club."

Coming from a guy who has more than a touch of class himself, that said it all. There was no need for further speech-making. There was nothing that could be said which wasn't implied in that single sentence.

So now it was spring and the Tigers were taking their exercises before an exhibition game. Ted Lyons, now a Detroit coach, was pushing bunts at Keller in a pepper game. When all the younger Tigers had done their chores and straggled off to the dugout and the clubhouse, these two continued to work, silent and unsmiling.

Rolfe, standing in front of the bench, watched them. And there was genuine pleasure in his gaunt features because he was able to say:

"Charley looks just great. He's wonderful. Running, hitting, fielding, throwing. He's done every single thing I've asked of anybody on the ball club. Of course, he's only been swinging in batting practice so far, but he has hit balls farther than anybody else."

Keller is 33 years old. For three seasons he has been a semi-invalid, crippled by a spinal injury that required a delicate operation. He is still young enough to play ball wonderfully well, if he can play ball at all.

"He tells me," Rolfe said, "'I'm going to give it everything I've got. I'll break my back to find out if I can play. If I can't, I'll be the first to tell you'"

Keller's pepper game was finished, and visitors walked across the field to shake hands with him where he stood leaning against the grandstand wall chinning with members of the Cardinals.

"Nice to see you," Charley said, and one of the visitors replied, "It's nicer to hear all the good reports about you."

"I haven't done anything yet," Charley said simply.

"Seems as though that Saul Rogovin ought to help your pitching," somebody said to Rolfe.

"You'd think so," Rolfe agreed. "He was sick last spring and we had to send him out of camp without really getting a look at him. He went to Buffalo and won 16 games and lost only six, so he must've been pretty good."

"Frank," Red called to his big bonus catcher, Frank House, "Keep your eye on this fellow batting now. A pretty good left-hand hitter."

"Who is he?" House asked, watching the Cardinals in the batting cage.

"Enos Slaughter."

A flicker of a grin crossed Rolfe's mouth. "I want the kid to study good hitters," he said. "And speaking of lefthand hitters, Dick Kryhoski has helped us every game we've played so far. The best pitchers may fool him sometimes, but if he can hit us a few home runs—"

Talbert trimmed Edward Alloo of New York, 6-2, 6-0.

Co-op Housing Faces House Battle Today

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

Faced with organized Republican opposition and backed only by lukewarm Democratic support, President Truman's middle-income housing bill is scheduled for debate on the House floor today.

Last night the 25-member House Republican policy committee unanimously decided to fight the two-billion-dollar cooperative housing program, and most Administration leaders conceded they could not master enough strength to keep it in the housing bill.

The Senate rejected the middle-income co-op housing idea last week by a 43-to-38 vote.

Rayburn Pledges Effort

House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D., Tex.), after a telephone conference with President Truman, told reporters, "We are going to try" to keep the co-op plan in the bill.

House Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin, jr., (R., Mass.) predicted that the co-op plan would be defeated and that Congress would expand the present Federal program of encouraging more construction through FHA guarantee of housing mortgages.

"We have had assurances that a considerable number of Democrats will join us in the fight on the co-op section of the housing bill," Martin said. "The co-op section, with low interest rates and long-term loans, would discriminate against veterans and others.

"The co-op program would provide loans at 3 percent interest, whereas veterans must pay 4 percent, and the interest under the FHA program is 4½ percent."

When the House yesterday adopted a four-hour debate rule on the measure, Representative Wright Patman (D., Tex.) defended the co-op section as "private enterprise."

"If there's a one-package answer to socialism, it's home-ownership," Patman said.

Leading the House assault on the co-op housing proposal, Representative Jesse Wolcott (R., Mich.) assailed the measure.

"It's inflationary, it's discriminatory, it's socialistic," he declared.

"It is not a home-building program, but a rent subsidy program. It does not propose that anybody own a home. It would help only about 3 percent of the population in the $2400-to-$4700 class, and would discriminate against those people who are building and buying their own homes."

In addition to the controversial co-op plan, the bill provides for an additional $2,750,000,000 in Government mortgage insurance for private housing. This feature has bipartisan support.

Grand Jury To Get Police Assault Case

Grover C. Johnson, 22, of 1110 V st. nw., yesterday was held for grand jury action on a charge of assaulting a police officer who had placed him and his companion under arrest for robbery.

The robbery charges against Johnson and James E. Roland, 29, of 29 H st. nw., were continued to March 28 after the complainant failed to appear in Municipal Court. A charge against Roland that he assaulted the robbery victim was also continued to the same date.

Police said Johnson and Roland robbed Joel Mickey, 45, of 1916 Wilson blvd., Arlington, of $3 in a restaurant in the 1200 block of 7th st. nw. early Saturday. When Mickey protested, they struck him with a coffee mug, according to police.

Mickey then left, but returned a few minutes later with Pvt. Walter J. Connolly, of the Second Precinct, who placed the two men under arrest. As the policeman took the two to a nearby patrol box, Roland broke away and struck Mickey, knocking him down, while Johnson began swinging at the policeman.

Connolly finally subdued Johnson at the scene, but Roland escaped, police said.

Quebec Clergy Tells Workers To Join Union

Quebec City, March 20 (U.P.).—The hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church in the Province of Quebec urged workers today to join labor unions.

In a pastoral letter calling labor unions indispensable, 25 bishops and archbishops also urged welfare legislation by the state and profit-sharing by management as means to beat communism.

Workers with full stomachs are not likely to turn to leftist ideologies for salvation, the manifesto said.

The pastoral letter was ordered read in churches throughout the ecclesiastical province. Taking a solid stand in support of unions, the letter said:

"The workers must unite in solid professional organizations that take their inspiration from the social doctrine of the church. The workers also must unite their efforts and their resources in cooperative organizations for their economic prosperity and their social advancement.

"The individual efforts of the workers, their collective efforts through Catholic action, professional associations and the cooperative movement are therefore the indispensable conditions of the restoration of labor life."

Administration Backs Limit On Accumulation of Leave

(R., Mich.) and several other members were revealed as discussing the advvisability of the proposed change in the leave law. "What would be the hardship," Engel asked Pace, "in saying that you have to take the 26 days leave during the year in which it is given or otherwise it is lost?"

The Budget chief answered in part:

"There is no question but that the accumulation of leave creates a fiscal burden on your operation . . . As to the kind of law you could write that would require it to be taken it would involve a great many factors . . . It is true that in some instances there are cases where you do not want a man during a period of emergency to take the full period of leave. I think in peacetime that should be relatively rare . . .

"Therefore, if it could be provided that leave generally were to be taken during the period that it was provided for, it would certainly be sound, it seems to me . . . If it could be provided administratively that that be done it would probably be more satisfactory than to provide so by law."

Endorsed by Pace

A top Administration spokesman, Pace gave his support to the general plan to hold down accumulated leave. Frederick Lawton, Pace's No. 1 assistant, gave his views on the leave plan to the committee as follows:

"As to the accumulation of leave in normal times there is not a conscious effort on the part of most groups to accumulate very much leave. The exceptions to that are in agencies where you have a short life, where the life of the agency is definitely determined.

"People accumulate leave as a backlog against unemployment at the end of the agency since the Government employe does not get unemployment compensation and since there is no severance pay such as is customary in a good many industries.

"Most of this accumulated leave problem is a result of a wartime buildup. It is high because a great many of the people who were in the service during the war were not able to get leave because of a shortage of help. If they had 90 days at the end of the war they could still retain that 90-day accumulation. Presently, they cannot accumulate more than 60 days.

"It is a situation that I think will work itself out in time. I think, as you probably do, that leave should be taken under normal circumstances currently without permitting an excessive buildup. You cannot make a firm requirement that everybody should take exactly 26 days. There will be some who will not take it for one reason or another, but I think as a general principle that leave should be taken for the purpose allowed."

Law Sought To Cut D. C. Registration Fees on Cars

Automobile Dealers To Submit Proposal To Commissioners Within Two Weeks

Proposed legislation to reduce the cost of registering automobiles in the District will be presented to the commissioners in about two weeks, their Traffic Advisory Board was told last night.

The recommendation, to be submitted by the Washington Automobile Dealers' Association, would bring the cost of registration in line with that of Maryland, which charges from $15 to $23 for license plates without personal property taxes on automobiles.

Present registration costs in the District, which include tags, inspection fees and property taxes in one package, were described last night as "much higher" than those in northern and eastern States.

By separating the personal property tax on automobiles from the cost of tags, the District could overcome "a serious amount of evasion of registration," according to a report of the Board's Motor Vehicle Administration Committee, headed by A. B. Barber.

Board Member F. L. Haller said the plan to make District fees conform to those of Maryland is being worked out by the dealers' association for presentation to the Commissioners, "probably in two weeks."

Changes suggested last night would (1) eliminate the personal property tax on automobiles and thereby increase total registrations within the District, or (2) require declaration of cars on personal property tax returns, according to former practice.

The Traffic Advisory Board approved the recommendation of its public safety committee for a one-day Traffic Safety Conference for Greater Washington, to be held sometime in October. It instructed Chairman A. Julian Brylawski to proceed with arrangements.

The Board also received a report showing an increase of 13.1 percent in traffic over all Anacostia River bridges for January over the same month last year. Since the South Capitol Street Bridge has been open, Sousa Bridge traffic has dropped only two percent, while 11th st. traffic has dropped 33.3 percent.

Five Arrested On Numbers Charge in Raid

Five persons were arrested yesterday when the police vice squad broke a door and raided a home at 1528 B st. ne.

Lieut. Roy Blick, head of the squad, said the place was a "turn-in joint" for numbers operators. He said a quantity of numbers slips and money were confiscated though occupants attempted to destroy them by throwing them into a furnace in the kitchen.

One woman, he said, ran to the second floor, dropping a trail of numbers slips and money on the way.

They were charged with operating a lottery and possession of numbers slips. All were released in $1500 bond each for appearance today before Cyril S. Lawrence, U. S. Commissioner.

They were Francis E. Hall, 39, of 830 12th st. ne., for whom the arrest warrant was issued; George W. Webb, 62, of 309 Harrison ave. se.; Edward K. Kendall, 45, who lived at the B st. address; his wife, Maggie, 47 same address; and Cora C. Glascoe, 49, of 912 64th ave., Cedar Heights, Md. The latter, Lieut. Blick said, was the woman who ran upstairs.

Fire Victim's Body Removed

Fire in Home Takes Life of Ailing Man, 67

Asa Rollins, 67, a retired painter, burned to death yesterday in his home at 1338 L st. se.

Firemen said it appeared Rollins' clothing was ignited when he fell against a stove.

They said he was dead when they arrived, either from suffocation or burns or a combination of both. Coroner A. Magruder Macdonald withheld a death certificate pending an autopsy today.

Except for his dog, Mickey, a terrier, Rollins was alone. His wife, Bessie, was at work. She said her husband had been in poor health.

Mrs. Rollins returned home while firemen were still in the house. The grief-stricken woman was taken to the home of a neighbor.

A nextdoor neighbor, Mrs. Cora Serrins, of 1336 L st. se., heard a noise sometime after 4 p. m.

"It sounded like the old man had fallen down the steps," she said.

She went next door but dropped the matter when she found the door locked.

At about 5:30 p. m., Bruce Farrell, 17, of 1340 L st. se., and Fred Wright, 17, of 1362 L st. se., saw smoke curling from the house.

They broke open the front door and found Rollins' body on the floor, his trousers afire. The dog scampered to safety. Damage to the house was minor.

Spring Comes Today; Rain Is Forerunner

Winter officially passed into limbo at 11:36 p. m., when the sun crossed the equator.

The new season was welcomed by rain and a promise of more of same today and late tonight. The Weather Bureau expected the temperatures today to range from 36 to 50.

Most Washingtonians won't really believe it's spring until the Japanese cherry blossoms bloom. And today's expected rainfall may be just what the doctor ordered.

"Warm rain helps," said Edward J. Kelly, special assistant to the director of National Capital Parks.

Kelly said the blossoms need about 10 days of real Spring-like weather to lure them into bloom.

He said there is a "slight chance" the blossoms will be out when Washington observes its annual Cherry Blossom Festival the weekend of March 31.

But the park areas are not without some color.

Kelly said some forsythia buds have bloomed and there are few crocuses in flower.

Crash Hurts Five Students From Md. U.

Five University of Maryland students were injured yesterday morning when the auto in which they rode struck a tractor-trailer in Hyattsville and caused an hour's traffic tie-up.

Police said an auto driven by Edward R. Hart, jr., 21, of 1000 Prospect st., went into the rear of the tractor-trailer on the overhead bridge across the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad tracks. Rear wheels of the trailer were knocked off, police said, and the trailer body came down on the bridge.

Taken to Hospital

The five students were taken to Prince Georges General Hospital, Cheverly. Two were admitted for treatment and the others treated and released.

Those admitted were Douglas DeVall, 21, of 6203 44th ave., Riverdale, suffering rib and ankle injuries; and Robert A. Lawrence, 21, 3910 Jefferson st., Hyattsville, sprains of both ankles and back injuries.

Those treated for cuts and bruises and released were Hart, John H. O'Donahue, 22, of 4609 Woodberry rd., Riverdale, and Boris J. Baturo, 21, 3812 Oglethorpe st., Hyattsville.

Hart and Belford B. McKinney, 35, of Winston Salem, S. C., driver of the tractor-trailer, were both placed under technical charges of reckless driving and summoned for hearing Monday in Hyattsville Police Court.

Williams Rites Listed

Funeral services for a youthful naval air reservist who was Washington's sixteenth traffic victim of the year, early yesterday, will take place at 2 p. m. Wednesday at the Deal Funeral Chapel, 4812 Georgia ave. nw.

Williams

He was Robert Allyn Williams, 17, who lived with his mother, Mrs. Eleanor Williams, at 101 S. Fairfax st., Alexandria. He was a student at George Washington High School, Alexandria.

Mrs. Williams said yesterday he joined the Navy air reserve two days after his 17th birthday, and Sunday was making up a day of duty he lost earlier, at a Navy installation in Potomac Park. He had just left there when he was struck, on Riverside dr., by a Navy jeep driven by William B. Carlson, 20, of the Naval Receiving Center. He died shortly afterward.

The youth is survived, beside his mother, by his father, Neil S. Wiliams, of 4530 9th st. nw., Washington. He was a native of Utica, N. Y. and will be buried at Cortland, N. Y.

Bill Tightens Engineering Rules Here

Architects Agree On Legislation; Written Exams for Licenses Required

A House District subcommittee yesterday was told local engineers and architects finally are in general support of bills to license and regulate their professions here.

After hearing a few last-minute minor objections, Chairman Oren Harris (D., Ark.) concluded hearings and directed Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West to prepare further compromise language changes.

The bills set up stricter regulations within the District and require written examinations for all applicants.

Status of "Outside" Engineers

Harris asked witnesses whether a qualified radio engineer in Dallas, Tex., would have to obtain a District license if he spent more than 30 days here working on engineering contracts for outside clients.

One witness said he would under the law, another disagreed, but both said they thought the man in question would voluntarily apply for a District license.

Dr. John Whittemore of the Institute of Ceramic Engineers strongly urged the subcommittee to include ceramic engineers in the bill.

Otherwise, he said, ceramic engineers might be excluded from practicing here, since most men in the specialized field might be unable to pass exams in the four basic fields of engineering listed in the measure. With this addition Whittemore said his group favors the measure.

Behind the Legislation

William N. Denton, jr., of the American Institute of Architects, testified his profession is solidly behind the legislation. He said, however, that the Master Builders Association, Inc., is unalterably opposed to "any bill at all." He implied he saw no ground for compromise with the building group.

Other witnesses for the bill included Wilbert J. Huff, head of the ceramical engineering department of the University of Maryland; Paul H. Robbins and Walter L. Simpson of the National Society of Professional Engineers, and Henry A. Snelling of the Council of Engineering and Architectural Societies.

Business Group To Study Police Probe Resolution

A resolution demanding an investigation of the Metropolitan Police by the District Commissioners will be considered early next week by the police committee of the Federation of Businssmen's Associations.

William Mileham, chairman of the committee, who returned from Florida yesterday, said his group also will consider a motion to indorse the proposed five-day, 40-hour week for policemen.

Both resolutions were introduced at a federation meeting last Wednesday night and were referred to the police committee.

Federation President Jerome B. McKee said yesterday that delegates favoring an investigation felt the Commissioners should clear up implications of police involvement in gambling uncovered in the congressional investigation of District crime.

In The Washington Post of last Thursday it was erroneously reported that the federation had adopted the resolution demanding an investigation. The Post regrets the error.

Citizens Council

Loyalty Test For Defense Staff Voted

Loyalty investigations by a Federal agency "such as the FBI" of persons engaged in any future civilian defense organization in the District was asked last night by the Interfederation Council.

With only a small minority dissenting, the 13 delegates meeting in the Engineers Club indorsed the demand for "careful screening" of civilian defense workers put forth Saturday by the District Federation of Citizens Associations.

Brendan O'Dwyer, delegate from Prince Georges County, objected that the motion lent aid to the "current hysteria" which he said had the effect of depriving persons of their liberties.

But the majority view followed that of District Delegate Herbert P. Leeman, who offered the original motion and said, "We're not trying to take away liberties; we're trying to protect what we have."

A temporary committee on civilian defense has been appointed by the District Commissioners to operate until Congress provides money for a permanent setup.

The council unanimously indorsed the proposed five-day week for Metropolitan, White House and Park policemen.

Bloomingdale

A resolution favoring enactment of the Kefauver District home rule bill was passed last night by the Bloomingdale Civic Association, in a meeting at the Tabor Presbyterian Church, 2d and S sts. nw.

The group also voted to send letters of appreciation to members of the Board of Education who voted for transfer of Cardozo High School students to the Central High School building.

The association voted to support the present membership campaign of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

Capitol View

The Capitol View Civic Association last night voted to send a letter to the District Recreation Board requesting establishment of a community center at the Richardson Elementary School, 53d and Blaine sts. ne. The group met at the school.

The organization voted to request Maj. Robert J. Barrett, superintendent of police, to detail two more plainclothesmen to patrol the area. It went on record as favoring a five-day work week for Metropolitan Police, and opposing further limitations of beverage licenses in Washington.

Chillum Heights

Abolition of the District personal property tax was demanded in a resolution passed last night by the Chillum Heights Citizens Association, meeting at the Luther Rice Memorial Baptist Church, N. Capitol st., and Riggs rd.

The association also voted approval, in principle, of the Kefauver District home rule bill; a five-day, 40-hour week for policemen and a 60-hour week for firemen; reduction in both on-sale and off-sale liquor licenses; installation of stadium floodlights and an indoor swimming pool at Coolidge High School; and District control of all property bought with District funds.

Chevy Chase

National representation, rather than the Kefauver bill, is the goal Washingtonians should work for, Edward F. Colladay, general counsel of the Board of Trade, told the Citizens Association of Chevy Chase, D. C., last night.

It was announced that Dr. George B. Galloway, Library of Congress specialist on D. C. government, will speak in favor of the bill at next month's meeting.

The group indorsed the five-day, 40-hour work week for policemen and donated $10 to the Red Cross. The meeting was held in the Chevy Chase Community Center.

Lincoln Park

The Lincoln Park Citizens Association reversed a previous stand last night and approved Capitol Transit's request for an increase in fares.

A motion opposing the increase was rescinded and a new one adopted after the group heard E. Cleveland Giddings, vice president of Capital Transit present reasons for the request.

The new resolution favored "such increase as found necessary by the Public Utilities Commission to give the company a fair and reasonable return on its investment."

The association also adopted resolutions favoring a five-day week for the police department and suggesting a study to reduce the number of charitable fund drives.

Fort Davis

Complaining of a dust nuisance, the Fort Davis Citizens Association last night asked that part of Fort Drive running through Fort Davis and Fort Dupont Park be surfaced.

The group also indorsed the proposed five-day, 40-hour week for policemen. William F. Osche was appointed to head a nominating committee for the coming election. The meeting was held in the Ryland Methodist Church.

Marshall Heights

The Marshall Heights Civic Association last night indorsed the five-day, 40-hour work week for policemen. Meeting in the First National Baptist Church, the group discussed the progress to date of proposals for redevelopment of the area. It also endorsed the Red Cross and National Association for Advancement of Colored People campaigns.

2 Convicted Of Assault In Night Club

'They Didn't Go to Dixie Pig to Pray,' Magistrate Says Of Former Marines

The public doesn't go to the Dixie Pig to pray, Magistrate Alan Bowie commented yesterday in Hyattsville Police Court as he convicted two former Marines of assault.

The pair, Charles C. Hesse, 21, of 3921 Ames st. ne., and Walter M. Boepple, 25, of 209 Cedar ave., Takoma Park, Md., were arrested March 11 on disorderly conduct charges at the Dixie Pig a Bladensburg night club.

Charged With Assault

They were also charged with assault because of a fracas with the arresting officers, Pvts. William A. Baxter and Albert Fierstein of the Bladensburg town police force.

Bowie fined them $100 each for assault and $25 each for disorderly conduct.

The magistrate said the management of the Dixie Pig would not have called police if Hesse and Boepple had not been out of order.

"Wherever they sell whiskey," he said, "they don't want the police if they can help it. It hurts business. They only call the police when they can't maintain order themselves."

Weren't Going to Church

And besides said Bowie:

"They weren't going to church and saying prayers in the Dixie Pig. If they hadn't been in a whisky place, I wouldn't have to hear this case. If men go into whisky places and drink and start a fight, whose fault is it if they get arrested?"

Bowie said he was letting Hesse and Boepple off with light punishment because "excellent" character witnesses appeared for them and because they had no prior records.

During World War II, Boepple served with the third Marine Division on Guam and Hesse with the First Marine Air Wing.

Frightened Cow Injures 3 at Sale

One woman suffered a broken leg when the heifer broke loose from an attendant in the cattle ring and butted prospective buyers.

Mrs. Rachel Mathias, 56, Irwin, Pa., was admitted to Prince Georges General Hospital, Cheverly, with a broken left leg.

Ernest M. Phillips, 43, Maryland Artificial Breeding Association representative at University of Maryland dairy farm, was taken to Leland Memorial Hospital, Riverdale, with chest injuries. Police said he was butted in the chest by the heifer.

Frank H. O'Rork, 42, 118 Tecumseh dr., Forest Heights, Md., was treated at Leland for burns and bruises and released. The charging heifer knocked O'Rork into a small heating stove in the giant tent where the sale was conducted, police said.

The 2-year-old heifer became frightened as it was led into the open ring and broke away from the attendant.

3 Police Escorts Speed Stricken Baby to Hospital

Three different police escorts last night led a 20-mile mercy dash from Fort Belvoir, Va., to Walter Reed Hospital to save a mysteriously stricken 10-months-old baby.

The military ambulance was escorted at top speed by Virginia State, Park and Metropolitan police over rain-swept highways while inside the vehicle oxygen was being given the baby, Larry, son of Sgt. and Mrs. Samuel Marrs of Fort Belvoir.

At Walter Reed Hospital, he was rushed to the operating room, and early today was reported still in critical condition, but resting comfortably.

His parents said the baby was taken to the Ft. Belvoir station hospital yesterday morning after a week's illness, and convulsions began last night.

Fatal Shooting Of Policeman's Wife an Accident

A certificate of accidental death was issued yesterday by Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District Coroner, in the case of Mrs. Florabel Henning, wife of a District policeman.

Mrs. Henning, 57, was shot Sunday by a 5-year-old boy who was playing with her husband's service revolver. The husband is Pvt. Oren J. Henning, 56, of the police communications and records section. The couple lived at 1331 K st. se., where the shooting occurred.

There will be no funeral services for Mrs. Henning. Wednesday morning, her body will be taken to Fredericksburg, Va., for burial in Oak Hill Cemetery there.

The tragedy occurred when Charles Elgin, 1721 Bay st. se., a neighborhood friend of Pvt. Henning, brought his triplet sons for their first visit to the Henning home.

The three adults were sitting in the kitchen, and the three boys were playing in the adjoining dining room. Private Henning, who was unused to children in his home, had left his uniform cap and holstered service revolver on the dining room table. One of the triplets, Andrew Magruder Elgin, took the gun and was playing with it when it was discharged.

Dodson Trial Given Story Of Terror In Bedroom

Forced to Strip, Lie in Bed With Arlington Officer, Housewife Testifies

An hour of terror at the hands of an armed Arlington policeman and a frenzied struggle for escape were described yesterday in Arlington Circuit Court.

Former Pvt. Francis E. Dodson, 31, is on trial for his life before an all-male jury. He is charged with intent to commit rape, and intent to rob H. Jack Bartels and his wife, Eleanor, an attractive housewife, in their home at 2810-B S. 16th rd., last September 29.

Denman T. Rucker, prosecutor, told the jury in his opening statement that the couple was subjected by Dodson to "every act of perversion that a depraved mind could conceive."

To Plead Insanity

Defense Attorney John Paul Jones insisted to the jury that he will prove his client was in a "state of amnesia," at the time, and will seek acquittal on grounds of temporary insanity.

Bartels related that Dodson knocked at his door about 12:30 a. m., called through the door that he wanted directions, then entered with his gun drawn, announcing "a stickup." Dodson wore the top of a woman's playsuit, substitute for a brassiere, drawn about his head, Bartels said, and a handkerchief over the lower part of his face. The brassiere-halter was introduced in evidence.

Mrs. Bartels, in nightgown and robe, who had descended the stairs partway, both she and her husband testified, was forced to accompany Dodson while he prowled the first floor. Then, they said, the intruder made Bartels and his wife strip naked.

Forced at Gunpoint

The two were forced upstairs at gunpoint, both testified, and Bartels forced into a closet. Mrs. Bartels was directed to lie on a bed. She complied, she said.

Then ensued her hesitant testimony of Dodson's kissing and fondling her, in partial darkness, his exposure of himself, and finally his attempts to force her to participate in unnatural acts.

A brief respite occurred, the couple both testified, when Mrs. Bartels called to her husband in the closet and he said he was smothering. Dodson, they testified, then released Bartels and forced him to lie, first face down on the floor, and then beside his wife and the intruder on the bed. Bartels said he was told by Dodson he must participate or watch.

Knocked Gun Away

At this, he said, he reached for and obtained a grip on Dodson's holstered gun, which flew across the room to the floor. His wife grabbed it, then fled with their two children, Lynn 9, and Leslie, 4, to the home of a neighbor, Maj. Fred M. Frey.

Major Frey testified he gave the gun to another neighbor, Col. William E. Elder. A few moments later, Elder shot Dodson in the leg with his own gun, on the Bartels stairway, while Major Frey, with another weapon, guarded the rear of the Bartels home. Dodson's leg was fractured by the shot, and is still in a cast.

Four Arlington policemen, who were called by other neighbors to subdue a "terrific struggle," received their call at 1:39 a. m., according to testimony.

Police Pvts. William Dinsmore and Joseph Crismond, who participated in arrest of Dodson, were turned into character witnesses for Dodson during cross-examination. Dodson, they said, had an excellent reputation for good conduct.

The trial, which recessed at 5:30 p. m., will resume today at 10 a. m.

Court Told To Plan Home For Negroes

The United States District Court has been ordered to find some way of carrying out the wishes of the late Mrs. Salvadora Elizabeth Smith to establish a suitable home for "aged colored people of the District of Columbia."

The United States Court of Appeals, in a decision handed down yesterday, reversed the District Court's ruling that the charitable trust Mrs. Smith had established had failed, since there was not enough money to establish such a home.

Mrs. Smith's estate, of approximately $11,000, will be used, under the higher court's order "in the best available way to carry out, as nearly as possible, the dominant purpose of the testatrix to care for aged colored people in the District of Columbia."

The case was decided by the appeals court on a suit brought against Mrs. Smith's estate by Susan L. Hunster, a cousin of the dead woman and her sole heir. The lower court had held that the estate should be distributed "as in case of intestacy."

The action came on the third day of the five-day triennial convention of B'nai B'rith, oldest and largest Jewish service organization in the world.

Another resolution voted in yesterday's business sessions reaffirmed support of President Truman's civil rights program and called on the more than 340,000 members in America to support civil rights legislation.

The convention also recommended designation of an annual "B'nai B'rith Day" on October 13 to mark the founding of the order on October 13, 1843, and urged full use of organization facilities to carry on its service program for hospitalized veterans.

As the result of another resolution, a committee will be appointed to study the problems and needs of the people of Israel and to recommend measures to aid them.

Mrs. Eliahu Elath, wife of the Ambassador from Israel, was among the honor guests at a tea and reception given yesterday for the wives of delegates at the Statler Hotel, where the convention is being held.

After additional business sessions today, a banquet tonight will feature addresses by Trygve Lie, United Nations Secretary-General, and Vice President Alben W. Barkley. Eddie Jacobson, former partner of President Truman in a Kansas City haberdashery, will be presented with a citation by Frank Goldman, B'nai B'rith president.

Two Pair of Barbary Apes Arrive at Washington Zoo

The Washington Post

There are now 35 different species of monkeys at the Zoo, since the macaca sylvana arrived by train from New York after a transoceanic plane trip from Antwerp, Belgium.

Zoo Director Mann said the new arrivals are famous for roaming over the Rock of Gibraltar, but seem to find Rock Creek quite as pleasant. They are the only apes common to Europe.

The two males and two females are about one-third grown. They will reach full size—about 14 to 15 inches long—at the age of three. They are brown, tailless and "quite attractive," Dr. Mann said.

The Washington Zoo hasn't had a Barbary ape in more than 10 years, he said, so the newcomers are regarded as a "very nice addition."

Rutherfoord Will Rule Upheld

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday upheld a District Court ruling on the construction of the will of Mrs. Helen M. B. Rutherfoord, whose estate was evaluated at nearly two million dollars.

Mrs. Rutherfoord, widow of Judge Mason B. Rutherfoord of the Ninth Virginia Circuit, died four years ago. Her home was at 1602 20th st. nw.

The court's decision, an attorney said yesterday, means that certain charitable organizations will take a $50,000 trust fund under the residuary clause of the will instead of next of kin. It also means that a $20,000 bequest for the care of a church graveyard in Ireland will take effect instead of passing to next of kin.

The residuary clause of the will, according to the decision, names as beneficiaries the Seamen's Church Institute of Pennsylvania; the Children's Seashore House for Invalid Children, Atlantic City, N. J.; the Masonic Hall and Asylum Fund of New York State, the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Pensylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.

Next of kin, attorneys said, were cousins and their heirs.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

As we get older, stress and strain, overexertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. Fashionable Fifties Take Notice

Balmain Shows Off Model Mama

By Peggy Preston

IT'S a rare son who notices his mother's clothes. But Mme. Maurice Balmain is luckier than most mothers in this respect. Her son, Pierre, is not only interested in what she wears, but he designs her entire wardrobe.

Son Pierre, a top Paris couturier, is pretty lucky too. His mother, who arrived here with him on Sunday for a brief visit in the Capital, does justice to his designs. A handsome, charming woman of medium height, Mme. Balmain is in her early 50's, and wears a size 18 dress. Yet every one of her costumes are from Balmain's spring collection which most critics consider suitable only for the young, slim woman.

"Her clothes dispel any idea of age being a bar to fashion," Balmain said yesterday while his smiling mere sat silently at his side. Making her first trip to this country, Mme. Balmain speaks only a few words of English, leaving all interviews to her garrulous Pierre.

Sheer Wool Suit Edged With Braid

SHE was dressed in a navy sheer wool suit with slim skirt and fitted jacket, the hem and edges of the coat edged in braid in a saw-tooth arrangement. Her hat was a small, side-slanted navy beret with veil and she carried a luxurious fox stole, midnight blue in color. A blue, polka-dotted chiffon kerchief knotted at the throat was her own original touch.

"Usually she wears the clothes exactly as I design them," he explained. "But occasionally, as with the scarf, she adds something of her own. And it is always an improvement."

Balmain has great respect for his mother's judgment of fashion. Each season, just before showing his collection to the public, he calls her into consultation. As each garment passes in review before her, she signifies her approval or disapproval, as the case may be. Those she does not care for are removed from the collection.

"She has an excellent sense of discrimination," explains Balmain. "And she does not judge according to her own taste alone. Rather, she sees fashion as it is related to all types and ages of women."

Wardrobe Complete But Lightweight

MME. BALMAIN'S wardrobe for her airborne trip to America was selected to suit a variety of climate conditions from New York to Florida. It is also lightweight. When packed in suitcases it tips the scales at 66 pounds, the exact weight allowed by transatlantic airlines.

Included are 16 pieces, plus accessories. Among the items are three greatcoats, loose and flowing, made of wool in different shades and finishes; two daytime suits; a black alpaca for cocktail time; a navy wool dress; some shantung and several evening gowns.

At yesterday's cocktail party given for the visiting Balmains at the Mayflower by Julius Garfinckel & Co., several of his designs from his recent Paris collection were modeled. Although the "flavor of the '20's" was evident in some of the costumes, it was not so pronounced as one might have expected from Balmain, considered the leading exponent of the "flapper" silhouette. The designer explained.

"We've sought to recapture the atmosphere of that era to create clothes for 1950. But we've rejected the ugly elements. There is no question of the return of the lowered waistline, the unbecoming neckline or flat, loose bodice."

PARIS CHECKS INTO THE CAPITAL: Mme. Maurice Balmain, visiting here this week with her son, French designer Pierre Balmain, models a suit which he created for her. Slim skirt is of black and white check wool. Straight lined jacket is in black smooth surfaced fabric. With it she wears a straw bowler. Balmain designed his mother's entire wardrobe for this trip, adapting each piece from his current collection

Man's World More Than Ever Before

THERE'S no doubt about it. It's a man's world.

Yesterday offered final proof. It was "Men's Day" at the Statler's weekly Fashion Party, once the great stronghold of Washington's feminine luncheon contingent. The boys were there by the dozens and six of them lined up at the Celebrity Table, where they viewed a parade of Easter finery—designed for ladies only.

Col. Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, jr., was at the table as was Hugo Gouthier, counselor of the Brazilian Embassy, who is soon returning to his homeland.

'Mrs. Veep' Best Dressed In Public Life

New York, March 20 (U.P.). Mrs. Alben Barkley today was named the best dressed woman in public life because she dresses "as protocol demands." Gorgeous Gussie Moran won out in the sports field because she doesn't.

The Fashion Academy picked the winners by their "ability to wear clothes in keeping with personal requirements, current fashion trends and individual budgets."

The academy said "Mrs. Veep" was the first wife of a Vice President of the United States to make its list during the 21 years the awards have been presented.

"Gorgeous Gussie," whose lace-ruffled panties shocked Wimbledon last year and black ones shocked Cairo this year, was picked as the best dressed woman in sports "for her trail-blazing fashions in functional play clothes," the Academy said.

Others selected as representative of various fields were All-American: Elizabeth Taylor; screen: Rosalind Russell; stage, Nanette Fabray; radio, Jinx Falkenberg; television: Fay Emerson; opera, Mrs. Lauritz Melchior; hostess,

Woman Who Was Slave to Her Husband Is Worried By Daughter's Severe Treatment of New Helpmeet, Who Is Showing Signs of Getting Fed Up, Mom Says

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I firmly believe parents never should interfere with married children and so far I have watched in silence, but it is very disturbing, especially as my daughter is at fault. She always said she never would be a doormat wife, as I was to her father. I waited on him hand and foot, but that is all past now, and what worries me is her.

Helen married Willard two years ago. They are such a fine looking couple, both nice people, and Helen from the very beginning of her marriage has been determined that her husband is going to be ideal—the one to run at her beck and call, to forsake all others, even his parents, as he has done, for which I am much upset.

Because Helen has remained employed, which gives them twice the income they'd have if she stayed home, Willard caters to her every whim and is trying so hard to please her, but I can see he is getting fed up and I don't blame him.

HE DOES the biggest part of the housework, takes the laundry to an automat, has the ironing done. He will cook, do the dishes, mend his clothes. Then if one of her friends gets something new, she will humiliate him by saying, "You don't get that for me." To show off her rule of him, she gets a headache, feels ill and takes to her bed to boss him around when they have guests. But as soon as he has everything shipshape, she suddenly becomes well.

All her girl friends, married and single, are fond of Willard, and remarks like these come to my notice—"How long will he stand for her nastiness?" I have to admit she is the exact replica of her father. He has all this pettiness and I have been very miserable, but being a woman with a family to raise, I stuck it out. But Willard won't, I am sure. What is to be done? L. C.

Tolerance Is Unwholesome

DEAR L. C.: Granted that Helen is making a grave mistake in treating Willard as a slave, still I think that you and other critical onlookers should realize that he is behaving almost as badly as she, in dancing to the tune she calls. It takes cooperation of sorts between man and wife to put on that kind of performance; and in my opinion, a rational self-respecting married person will inexorably decline to be a party to such goings-on.

Willard should behave like a man, not a scared rabbit, in relation to Helen. He should become an exemplar of fair play, an exponent of justice, not a long-faced martyr in double harness. He should pitch his tents in the middle ground of consideration for himself and her; mindful that the golden mean of human behavior has been defined by Jesus in terms of loving thy neighbor "as thyself"—not more or better than, in service self-deprecating ways.

Helen's emotional approach to marriage is pathological, in the sense that she has been and is sick with unconscious fear of finding herself enslaved to a viciously selfish male—the fate you were always beefing about.

Thus she entered marriage belligerently, without giving Willard a chance to prove his teamwork quality; and her aggressive tactics in keeping him jumping—to cook, scrub, mend; wait on her hand and foot, etc.,—are really an acutely neurotic attempt at self-defense. She's like a punch-drunk pugilist fighting shadows; and she's been so morbidly busy with this business that she fails to see poor Willard's actual self and extreme pacifist bias.

May Revert Unpleasantly

HOW LONG will husband put up with her? That is anybody's guess. Something in Willard's past conditioning must have made him a glutton for punishment in relation to the woman he loves,—else he would have sat down on Helen's insatiable demands some time ago, I think. Maybe he was a refugee from a nagging Mom when he married Helen, thus took wifely bossing for granted until his conjugal indulgence was tried preposterously, whereupon he began to run the fever of resentment you see, —which may or may not destroy his affection for his tormentor.

What can be done? Helen and Willard must answer that. Each needs intensive psychological help, such as the parents who formed them cannot provide in this slow-burning crisis. Helen needs to learn how, and why, to put aside her neurotic defenses; and Willard needs specialist counsel in becoming truly the family head in relation to her. M. H.

Speaking Class Ends Season

Mme. Boheman, wife of the Swedish Ambassador, will be a guest of honor at the final luncheon of Mrs. Hugh Butler's Tuesday public speaking class to be held in the Madison Room of the Wardman Park Hotel today.

Mrs. Paul Banfield, wife of the head master of Landon School, and Mrs. Matthew W. Stirling, lecturer and explorer, will also be special guests.

Mrs. Jesse R. Hildebrand will be toastmistress. Class members will deliver speeches to end the winter course, which has been meeting at the hotel since January.

Mrs. John R. Steelman and Mrs. Cyrus King will be guests of honor for the Wednesday class, which will have Mrs. Joseph Miller as toastmistress at its luncheon this week.

Both luncheons will conclude with presentation of prizes by Mrs. Butler. The first prize will go to the most improved; the second to the best speaker. Prize winners are chosen by class members.

These two classes will conclude Mrs. Butler's teaching career in Washington, which began in 1937 when the Hugh Butlers moved here from Massachusetts. The second week of April will see them headed for Claremont, Calif., where they expect to build a new home.

Mrs. Butler plans to continue her teaching and writing for the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

'Women Have Power'—Should Use It

American women owe it to their country to participate in public affairs, Jennings Randolph said yesterday.

In his address before the Women's National Democratic Council at the Washington Club, the former Congressman from West Virginia said that there are more women than men in the United States, that they live longer, are better educated on the average, and control the larger percent of this country's wealth.

For these reasons, he continued, it is the responsibility of women to assume their natural roles as leaders in government and business.

Harpist to Lecture

Miss Sylvia Meyer will be guest of honor at a club dinner at the University Womens' Club on Thursday at 1515 New Hampshire ave. nw. Following the dinner, Miss Meyer will give a talk and demonstration on "The Use of the Harp in Its Relation to the Symphony Orchestra."

Confessions of a Famous Father

Ride 'Em, Cowboy! Papa Bucks Like the Bronco

By John Mason Brown

Editor's Note: Mr. Brown turns his critical eye away from the world with its woes to observe with reportorial zeal his two small sons and their playmates. This is the second of six chapters condensed from John Mason Brown's latest book, "Morning Faces," published by Whittlesey House.)

Instalment Two

HAPPY BIRTHDAY TO YOU

MY wife planned it carefully.

"Movies in the front hall here?" I had asked, thinking back to those earlier birthday parties when we quieted the young until suppertime with rented films of Mickey Mouse and Felix the Cat.

"Dear me, no. At 9 years? They're much too old for that. He's asking them here for lunch. Eight of them. Then, I thought we'd take them to the Rodeo."

"The Rodeo?" I gasped, tired already.

"Of course. They'll love it. Besides, it'll get them out of the apartment."

I knew what she meant. Any parent would know. So would any houseowner who was not a professional wrecker.

Parents Express Tell Tale Relief

FOUR were deposited by their nurses; three by their mothers.

Thereupon the faces of these women changed imperceptibly. A telltale suggestion of relief—or was it gratitude?—brightened their eyes.

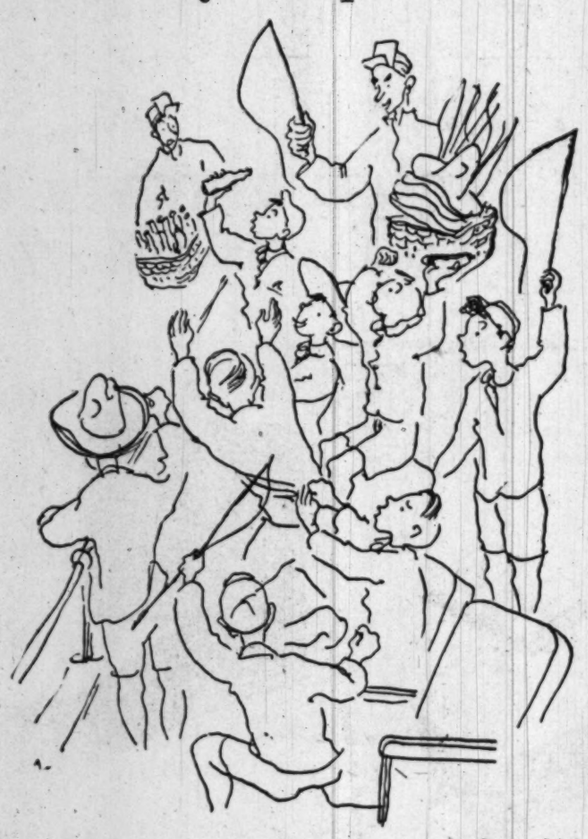
"Hi, Alfred" "Hi, David" Or "Hi, Harold" the two boys would call, with arms outstretched. Before any answers could be given, and the prepared speech regretfully made, the presents were snatched from the bestowing hand, and a race started to the 9-year-old's bedroom.

My wife and I stayed in the living room as a rather unwelcome welcoming committee. Everything seemed to be going satisfactorily back in his room, until the air was atomized by sudden shrieks.



—Susanne Suba

"Want a Roy Rogers pistol?" "Want a Western whip?"

Machine Gun Mounted for Action

"WHAT'S the matter?" I demanded, pushing past him and hard against a stoutly defended door. When the door at last gave way, I was confronted by a room filled with dropped wrapping paper, disordered ribbons, shiny toys, screams of delight, little boys, the rat-tat-tat of a machine gun, and the smells of a new chemistry set already in use.

"We told him he could stand guard," said one of the bigger boys, amazed that anyone should not find joy in such an assignment.

Sling-Shot Fever Seizes the Party

"Please come," she said.

"The next person who takes a slingshot out of his pocket will be sent home at once without lunch," I thundered charmingly.

"Without ice cream!" I added. Two slingshots came down.

"And he won't go to the Rodeo at all!"

Wild West Call To the Garden

AT LAST, the luncheon was finished. Then came the great moment, the moment blissful and friendly, when the lighted cake flickered at the pantry door as the signal for cease firing and the singing of "Happy Birthday."

When the wish was made, the candles blown out, and the cake sliced, one little boy screamed, "No cake for me. I hate it."

By then, the Wild West was calling. It was time to get going, which meant going to the bathroom once again on a community plan.

Upon reaching Madison Square Garden, out two taxis emptied like the Trojan horse. The Rodeo, when seen alone, is wearing enough. When seen in the company of seven little boys, it is downright exhausting. You not only watch the bucking broncos; you are surrounded by them.

The performance in the ring that afternoon is blurred in my mind. I didn't get to see much of it. I spent most of my time in the men's room. I functioned more as a shepherd than as a spectator.

At least seven times during the afternoon I climbed over the people either behind me or around me, to lead little boys on private missions.

Once I had all seven of them with me, including the 4-year-old. Although there are pleasanter places than the men's room at the Garden, he thought it charming. No toreador could have been happier.

With a look of excitement on his face he took a deep inhale, and said, so that everyone could hear him, "Oh, Daddy, smell the bulls!"

Peanut Vendors Are Psychologists

THEN, there were the vendors. Astute psychologists, they sized up my predicament in a moment, and hovered around me like planes returning to a carrier.

Popcorn, peanuts, spun candy, soft drinks, ice cream—these were simple enough; inexpensive, too. I didn't mind them.

The real hazards were the men who came by screaming, "Want a cowboy belt?" "Want a Roy Rogers pistol?" "Want a Western whip?"

"Will you buy me one?" asked each little boy, in spite of the fact that the prices ranged from 50 cents to a dollar and a half.

"No!" I would say firmly. "No!"

"Oh, Daddy!" my 9-year-old would snarl, not only indignant but ashamed. And six other sneering faces would pivot toward me. From them I learned something I had never before suspected. A Bronx cheer can be silent.

Just before the time came to leave, I was cowardly enough to surrender. I began to wonder what these boys would say to their fathers about my son's father. Accordingly, I bought each boy at 50 cents apiece chameleons or turtles that I knew could be purchased for 10 cents three blocks away.

The leaving was not without its difficulties. My wife and I desired to get out before the crowd. Our guests desired to stay until after the crowd had left. We won, however, although not without a struggle.

When we got home, and our boy had had his supper, he said, his eyes still glistening, "Wasn't it a wonderful birthday!"

Then he went to bed. So did we. At once.

Comes on Wings to Husband's Book Launching

By Marie McNair and Elizabeth Maguire

MRS. BRADLEY NASH winged in from Nassau yesterday just in time for a party at the Sulgrave Club given by a group of friends to launch her husband's new book.

Mr. Nash and Cornelius Linde are coauthors of "A Hook in Leviathan," which will appear in bookstalls today. You could never guess from the title that what these gentlemen have written is a critical interpretation of former Prseident Herbert Hoover's recent report on reorganization of the executive branch of the Government.

Long in Government service, Mr. Nash came to Washington as secretary to Mr. Hoover when he was Secretary of Commerce. Since then he's been with the RFC, War Production, the General Staff of the War Department and War Assets.

Arthur Krock, who wrote the foreword for collaborators Nash and Linde, was at the party and among the hundred or so guests were a group from Capitol Hill as well as topflight journalists and radio commentators.

OAS Delegates Feted at Reception

OPENING gun in a round of entertainment for delegates to the special meeting of the Inter-American Economic and Social Council of the OAS was the reception yesterday afternoon at the Pan American Union. Host was Dr. Alberto Lleras, Secretary General of OAS, and in the receiving line were Senora de Lleras, the chairman of the Inter-American Economic and Social Council, Julio Huertematte and Senora de Huertematte, and the chairman of the special meeting, Argentine Finance Minister Ramon Cereijo, and Senora de Cereijo.

Guests yesterday, numbering some 500, included all Latin American Ambasadors and their wives and members of the Department of State. Also invited were Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Oscar Chapman, the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Charles Brannan, the Under Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney; Under Secretary of State and Mrs. James Webb; members of the International Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Export-Import Bank, the FAO, ECA and Inter-American Defense Board.

Veep and Mrs. Luncheon Hosts

THE Vice President and Mrs. Barkley gave a luncheon yesterday in the Vice President's office at the Senate for Mr. and Mrs. Richard Coburn of St. Louis, Mo.

Deputy Undersecretary of State and Mrs. Dean Rusk will be honored this evening at a dinner given by the Ambassador of Thailand and Princess Wan Waithayakon at the embassy. Covers will be laid for 18 and the guests will include Col. and Mrs. R. F. Vance, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Surrey, Robert E. Hoey, Mr. and Mrs. Serge Rip, and officials of the embassy and their wives.

Billy Tea Club Swings Partners

THE Billy Tea Club held a square dance last evening at Normandy Farm. Among those attending were former Ambassador and Mrs. Nelson Johnson; Mr. and Mrs. Richard Boyce; J. U. Garside, Commercial Counselor of the Australian Embassy, and Mrs. Garside; the First Secretary of the Australian Embassy and Mrs. Owen Davis, and the Scientific Attache of the New Zealand Embassy and Mrs. Armstrong.

The Australian Ambassador and Mrs. Makin are patrons of the Billy Tea Club, which is formed primarily of Washington residents hailing from "down under."

Newest spot for lunching is the Mozart Room at the Windsor Park Hotel which will open tomorrow with a hat show by Mme. Chautemps. Hazel Markel, program director of WTOP, will be mistress of ceremonies.

Mme. Thors, wife of the Icelandic Minister, will be among those who will have guests. Others attending will be Mrs. Donald Dawson, Mrs. Edward Bartelt, Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, Mrs. Frederick Mitchell Gould, Mrs. Auguste Boas, Mrs. Eugene Cox, Mrs. John Lesinski and Miss Grace McGerr.

Off to Europe For Real Tour

MRS. EDITH BURROWS is in New York today on her way to Europe. The trip, which she'd hoped for for many weeks, materialized before she thought it actually would, and so Edie Burrows is off to tour the continent. Easter in Paris is her aim. After that she'll visit Spain, England, Rome and the Riviera. She may do some writing (she once did pieces for Vogue) but in any event she's bound to have a rip-roaring good time!

Luncheon and tea-time in the Mayflower Lounge yesterday found Washington society enjoying the weekly fashion show at noon and chatting over the tea cups from 4 to 6.

At one table for tea were Mrs. Hamilton Bryan, Mrs. Felix Johnson, Mrs. Lynde McCormick and Mrs. Maxwell Murray, representing the service set.

At luncheon, among those entertaining were Mrs. Walter Chamblin and Mrs. James L. Dixon, who had at her table Lady Dorothy Ross, from Scotland, a guest of the Leander McCormick Goodharts.

Mme. Munthe Morgenstierne, wife of the Norwegian Ambassador, is the guest in whose honor Mme. Vladimir Rybar will entertain at luncheon on Tuesday, March 28.

Mme. Rybar, who is going to California in April to visit her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Geauque, will be guest of honor at a farewell luncheon to be given by Mrs. Arthur Vennell on March 29. Mme. Espaillat will give a small dinner party in her honor on Saturday.

Air Commodore W. E. G. Mann, director of Navigational Services for the United Kingdom, and R. W. J. Sullivan, chief engineer, Navigational Services of the United Kingdom, were honor guests at cocktails yesterday at the Carlton Hotel with D. W. Rentzel, the host. Mr. Rentzel is administrator of Civil Aeronautics of the Department of Commerce.

Wilson Cheerleader Wins Beauty Contest

Miss Janis North, 17-year-old cheerleader from Woodrow Wilson High School, was winner of the beauty contest at the "Cover Girls Dance" Saturday at the Washington Hotel.

The winner, daughter of the District Postmaster and Mrs. Roy M. North, was chosen from 23 contestants from local high schools. Sorrell sorority sponsored the dance.

Anne Tells Fatherless Bride-to-Be Her Mother May Give Her Away At a Formal Wedding in Church

DEAR ANNE:

My problem is about me and my wedding. I was thinking about having my mother give me away since my father is dead. Do you think that would be okay? If it is, what should mother wear? My wedding is formal and an all-white affair. Would a white street-length dress be okay?

S. C., Washington.

Yes, if you have no near relative to give you away, it's perfectly proper for your mother to fill this role. Since long dresses are in order for a formal wedding, I think it would be better for your mother to wear one of this type. You don't want her to be out of keeping with the rest of the bridal party.

The mother's clothing should be unobtrusive so as not to overshadow the bride in such a situation, particularly since you will both be wearing white. However, a simply-made white afternoon dress and hat should be well suited to the occasion.

ONE reader's recent inquiry about "Save the Children Federation" has uncovered a host of area patrons of this nationally known settlement school program for mountaineer communities. Here are two letters containing helpful information for others wishing to contribute.

Dear Anne:

Save the Children Federation has been and still is very active in Washington, D. C. There is no established workroom but Mrs. Irene B. Caldwell, 2223 Hall pl. nw., is the very efficient chairman of this Washington committee. The work channels through her and is carried on by church groups, Girl Scouts, Campfire Girls and individuals. Through the Washington, D. C. committee many of the small sponsored schools in the isolated mountain regions of Kentucky, Tennessee, West Virginia, Arkansas, Missouri, Arizona and Virginia are helped each year.

Camelia Hunt

Dear Anne:

I have mailed several boxes to the Save the Children Federation, and as you can see by the enclosed letter of thanks they are very appreciative.

Mrs. A.W.D.
Silver Spring, Md.

The letter enclosed by Mrs. A.W.D. comes from the Southwest Virginia Area Office of the Save the Children Federation, Box 478, Abingdon, Va., and it is indeed expressive of gratitude for donations.

DEAR ANNE:

The February 20 issue of Look magazine states that a syndicate called Spadea Fashions, Inc., is now offering, through 21 United States newspapers, patterns by a dozen American high-fashion designers. Could you tell me whether any of the Washington papers, or those of any nearby city, will run these patterns? If so, what papers?

MRS. FRANCES W. McDANIEL.
Landover, Md.

I do not know of any Washington or neighboring papers that plan to run the Spadea patterns. I suggest you write the firm at 253 W. 50th st., New York, N. Y., to find out just how to obtain them.

Puerto Rico's First Lady Talks to Democrats

Senora Munoz-Marin, wife of the Puerto Rican Governor, discussed the ways her husband and his government are helping to solve problems of overpopulation on the Caribbean island, in a talk before the Women's National Democratic Club yesterday.

She explained that the government is trying to encourage more industry on the island. She also told of the government programs which teach Puerto Ricans how to grow varied and nutritious food in their own gardens, so that they might not have to depend so largely on imported food.

Dr. Rafael Picot, president of the Planning Board of Puerto Rico, and Dr. Juan Pons, commissioner of health, also spoke at the luncheon meeting at the clubhouse.

Stray Bullet Incident Held Accidental

The Mount Rainier town council last night decided that the shot fired early Friday morning by a town policeman through the law office of a former mayor was accidental.

In informal discussion, Police Chief John W. Wise told members that Police Pvt. Daniel W. Manuel snapped the trigger, thinking the gun empty.

The chief, who was a witness to the shooting, said the bullet crashed through the front window of the police station, traveled across Rhode Island ave., and into the empty office of former Mayor Floyd B. Mathias.

He said it was "just one of those things, a pure and simple accident."

Mayor Herbert W. Reichelt announced the council's decision of "accidental shooting" after hearing other witnesses, including Manuel and Pvt. W. H. Horton, whose gun Manuel fired.

In other action, the council voted to take part in the Prince Georges County recreation program, starting in June and ending after Labor Day. The county will furnish the athletic director and leader, while the town will provide the facilities, it was explained.

The group also voted to place parking signs six feet each way, from the driveway of the Prince Georges Bank & Trust Co., 3718 Rhode Island ave.

Harvey Named Montgomery Jury Foreman

C. Willard Harvey, Brookville insurance man, was named foreman of the Montgomery County grand jury for the March session yesterday when it convened at Rockville.

Included among the 37 cases to be presented to the panel by State's Attorney Walter W. Dawson are several involving evasion of Maryland income tax laws, the first such cases to be presented in Montgomery County.

Judge Charles W. Woodward did not give the jurors any specific instructions in his charge but he cautioned them that they are not an administrative body. He said:

George F. Beyer, Dorothy W. Ball, Betty Bower Abbott, James W. Baldwin, Marshall W. Buxton, Wiley G. Griffith, Charles H. Carter, Dana B. Johannes, jr., Roger W. Williams, Norman L. Ingalls, sr.

Also, W. Russell Lamar, Carl F. Stone, Calvin H. Cobb, Guy L. Carter, Joseph L. Aitchison, Rosalma A. Jordan, Gillis C. Owings, F. Newell Griffin, Irene M. Lima, Grover Poole, Donald G. King, and William F. Carl.

Ark Dwellers To Face Jury

Cases of 13 or 14 "ark" dwellers along the Potomac river front in Alexandria who have refused to follow police orders to move will be presented to an Alexandria Grand Jury Thursday.

This was decided yesterday after a conference between Police Chief Edgar Sims and Commonwealth's Attorney Howard W. Smith, jr.

About 50 residents of Alexandria presented a petition to the City Council charging that the ark and shack dwellers are "drunks and continuing nuisances." Police ordered them to move by yesterday, but they refused.

Man Who Spent Weekend In Department Store Indicted

A 28-year-old burglar, who spent a weekend looting Wooward & Lothrop department store after hiding inside at closing time, was indicted yesterday by the District grand jury for housebreaking and larceny.

The defendant, Joseph G. Albert, jr., of Seattle, Wash., was arrested February 27, after he was spotted in a store areaway by a policeman. He had with him a suitcase, loaded with jewelry, valued by store officials at $7500, which had been stolen in the store, police said.

Also indicted was Peter Macris, 55, of 1607 17th st. nw., charged with assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon and carrying a deadly weapon.

Macris was arrested January 28, shortly after he went to the Annapolis Flower Shop, 801 11th st. nw., and shot the owner, James S. Karas, 46, of 917 Emerson st. nw., because of a grudge over a 5-year-old business deal, police said. Karas was admitted to Emergency Hospital in critical condition but was subsequently released.

Paul J. Garrahan, 43, an unemployed salesman, of 621 Jefferson ave., Falls Church, Va., was indicted on 11 counts of forgery and uttering.

Police said Garrahan signed the name of William Duffy, 3616 Connecticut ave. nw., to checks totaling $250, after Duffy had befriended him and given him the keys to his own apartment. Garrahan used Duffy's check book after Duffy had been hospitalized because of an illness, police said.

Louis A. Zampini, 36, of 1156 15th st. nw., proprietor of a newsstand at 1624 L st. nw., was indicted on charges of operating a lottery and possession of numbers slips. Zampini was arrested February 16 at his stand by Capt. Anthony Richitt, of the Eighth Precinct, who was in command of the Third Precinct at the time.

Also indicted on charges of operating a lottery and possession of numbers slips were Walter B. Bush, 51, of 5344 Hayes st. ne., and Sarah McClain, 48, of 617 L st. nw.

Ernest Price, jr., 24, of 2800 13th st. nw., was indicted on charges of robbery and carrying a deadly weapon. He was identified as one of three men who held-up Roosevelt Spencer, 29, a numbers writer, in his home at 224 F st. ne., and robbed him of $4200 last September.

Robbery charges against Mrs. Ida V. Sapoznick, 23, of 1405 Rhode Island ave. nw., and Mrs. Diane G. Daniel, 24, of 1204 K st. nw., were ignored by the grand jury. The two women were arrested last December in connection with the theft of $1500 from a recently discharged soldier.

Two Men Indicted For Jail Break Attempt

They were Max Cecil, 30, of Durham, N. C., and John M. Havens, 20, a former Army military policeman. The indictment alleged that on January 31, they and Paul J. Sheppard, 1127 11th st. nw., sawed through Fairfax County jail cell bars in the attempt.

Sheppard previously pleaded guilty to the charge. He admitted using a hacksaw blade brought to him in jail in the coat of his 6-year-old daughter when she and his wife visited him. He received a six months sentence for the break attempt.

Two Alexandria men were indicted yesterday, with a 17-year-old juvenile, on a charge of housebreaking. On arraignment, the two pleaded guilty. Sentence was deferred to May 2 by Judge Paul E. Brown, pending investigation by a probation officer.

The two are Charles L. Brown, jr., 21, and Louis D. Ruiz, 21, both of 614 S. Patrick st. They were accused of breaking into a filling station and store in New Alexandria, Fairfax County, in January, and taking cash and merchandise valued at $275.

Limitation Law Bypassed On Alimony

The 12-year statute of limitations set by District laws on money judgments is not binding on an American residing in an enemy country during wartime.

This ruling by the United States Court of Appeals yesterday reinstated a $9150 judgment obtained by Mrs. Marjorie Pilson Salvoni in 1934 against her former husband, Edwin H. Pilson of 2003 Belmont rd. nw., president of the Dupont Iron Works, Inc.

Mrs. Salvoni, the former Miss Marjorie Savin of Washington, divorced Pilson in Rockville, Md., in October, 1923, and was married to Alexander Britton in December of that year. He died in 1926, and she later married Count Salvoni of Florence, Italy. She has lived in Florence since 1937.

The judgment she was awarded by the District Supreme Court, now the District Court, in 1934 was for back payments of $75 a month for maintenance of their three children, which were unpaid since 1923.

Under the law, Mrs. Salvoni had 12 years in which she could try to collect the judgment. The war broke out before the limitation period had expired, however, and the Appeals Court ruled yesterday that she was prevented by the Trading with the Enemy Act, and the absence of mail service, from access to the courts.

Hyattsville Studies Need For Rail Guard

The Hyattsville city council last night took under advisement the question whether a watchman is necessary at a railway grade crossing, south of the highway bridge in the city.

They heard F. O. Hoskins, general manager of the eastern district of the B. & O. Raidroad, reaffirm his company's stand that the watchman is unnecessary.

In other action, the council referred to its transportation committe a suggestion of the Hyattsville Professional and Businessmen's Association that Capital Transit Co. buses be rerouted from College Park to Hyattsville to take in parts of the city's business sections now without public transportation.

By Richard L. Coe

EVEN MORE THAN did "The Medium" and "The Telephone," "The Consul" has captured New York.

This is Gian-Carlo Menotti's musical drama (his own definition) and seats for the Ethel Barrymore Theater are at a premium. It is most likely that this tortured story of the unfortunate fleeing a police state will carry its Broadway career even further than did its double-billed predecessors.

Once again the composer has written his own play and directed its production. Watching his unique work, one is convinced that its success lies in Menotti's decisive ability to be himself. He is shrewd enough a showman to include some of the Grand Guignol touches that characterized "The Medium" and to devise a diverting character in a magician seeking, like the heroine, a visa to flee from a police-controlled state. But the faithfulness to his own scheme is the essence of this creator.

Therefore, watching his work demands something of an audience which gradually is drawn into his design, a skein of music and story inextricably linked. And when the lightning finally does strike, as it most electrically does at the end of the second act, one realizes that here a true, creative imagination is at work.

This scene affords Soprano Patricia Neway a demanding challenge, to which she rises with a vocal and dramatic power which will be seared in the memories of all who fall under its spell. Her denunciation of the legal redtape which has kept her and her family prisoners in an unidentified country of which her husband is a hunted member of the underground, is the climax of this words and music fusion.

Waiting Room Scene

It takes place in the waiting room of a foreign consulate where she seeks the visa which will bring freedom to her family and herself. The secretary and surroundings have the cold impersonality of octopus governments. Applicants for visas (both countries are unnamed) pathetically wait their turn and one has seen them this way before, days earlier in the first act. Now, with her baby dead and her mother-in-law dying, the heroine's bitterness snaps out in a chilling tirade, climaxed, just as she is about to see the consul, by the appearance of one of her husband's shadowy enemies.

To give visual impact to his story, Menotti employs the Guignol effects that darted through "The Medium." The heroine's dreams are symbolized. She sees her baby dead in a ghastly apparition and in the final scene she puts her head into a gas-filled oven, again to see the faces that have brought her to this end.

Thus by blending this theatrical form with the spirit of fear now abroad in the world, Menotti has taken care of the visual emotional aspects, but for all this, "The Consul" is essentially an attack on the emotions through music. In the modern metier of his score (again, highly personalized to the composer), rarely melodic, the music has the impact of a haunting, insistent wail from which, hours later, one may still struggle to escape.

Marie Powers, as the mother-in-law, has the one melodic strain likely to be isolated from the tightly-knit score, a lullaby which she sings with affecting simplicity.

But all the singers are equal to their tasks and it is interesting to observe in the program notes that all of them, with the exception of Miss Powers, while possessed of honorable singing careers, have labored in comparative obscurity. How many more such artists does our country possess still waiting their opportunities? Andrew McKinley, for instance, has not only a superbly controlled tenor, he also boasts a nice comic style and has skillfully taken on the tutoring of Fred Keating for his amusing moments of magic.

Lehman Engel conducts with cool understanding of the complex, brooding score, a triumph for him as much as for the singers. A recording has been made of the entire work by Decca and will be available shortly.

THE WASHINGTON World Affairs Center tonight presents another in its series of films on international understanding at 8 o'clock in the Interior auditorium, 18th and C . . . Films from our Government, the IRO, Italy and Britain are scheduled.

HARDY MEAKIN calls and announces happily that Keith's is holding "Cinderella" for a fifth week.

THE GAYETY tonight opens its promising production of "Goodbye, My Fancy" under direction of Sam Wanamaker, who'll also repeat his New York role . . . Faye Emerson stars, with Haila Stoddard and Bramwell Fletcher.

Augustana Group Upholds Lutheran Choral Tradition

By Paul Hume

This country owes a real debt to the Lutheran tradition in choral music.

Last night another in the season's visiting Lutheran choruses came to Constitution Hall. It was the Augustana Choir from Rock Island, Illinois, directed by Henry Veld. Brought here by Washington's National Lutheran Chorus, the group shone brightly.

Familiar names made up the list but the music was unfamiliar. A Bach motet, and an extended work of Benjamin Britten received local premieres. Bach came first, with "What Can Life Be But a Shadow?" The good features of the chorus and its conductor were immediately apparent.

Under Veld's sensitive leadership, the Augustana Choir sings with beautiful, natural enunciation. This is true in English, German, and as far as I could tell, in Swedish.

Their balance is excellent and their tone has a polished quality that never deserts them. Beyond this, Veld it never led into regions of "sound for sound's effect." He maintains a musical line throughout his work. This is in happy contrast to some choral leaders who distend the shape of phrases for the sake of gorgeous but misplaced choral effect.

The choir, singing entirely from memory, ranged through Vaughan Williams' "Lord, Thou Hast Been Our Refuge" and two songs from the Peaceable Kingdom by Randall Thompson. Dividing into men's and women's choruses, they continued with the same fine singing. The opening chorus from Bach's Ascension Oratorio was weak in the ladies' arrangement but they sang it well.

Only one point weakened the choir's entire evening: In the early moments, in both Bach and Vaughan Williams, there was a tendency to raise the pitch. And at the close of the program, fatigue forced the sopranos to flat in the tiring measures of Taneieff's Sunrise. Aside from these slight disaffections, it was a great concert.

PHA Agrees To '50 Budget For Greenbelt

The Greenbelt city council learned informally last night that the Public Housing Administration has agreed to terms of a 1950 budget for the Federally owned city.

During its meeting last night, the council heard by telephone that Ralph Powers, Greenbelt city solicitor, has reached agreement with PHA officials on the budget.

One bone of contention has been a budget provision for funds for reserve or replacement of equipment.

PHA pointed out that some of the equipment was owned by the Federal Government and hence Greenbelt had no right to seek funds for replacement of this equipment.

PHA asked that $875 be eliminated from this year's budget because of this and also asked for a refund of $11,377 in funds given Greenbelt over the last 10 or 11 years for replacement of equipment owned by the Federal Government.

Destiny and Gasparri Ended Hope for Parish Work

Kees Van Hoek, a native of The Hague and now an Irish citizen, has been a correspondent in London, Geneva and the United States. His first biography of Pius XII appeared in 1939. After much research and a private audience with the Pope last fall, Van Hoek has written in "Pope Pius XII, Priest and Statesman," a full and vivid description of the man and his career, from a delicate boy in Rome to supreme ruler of the Roman Catholic world. The biography is presented by The Washington Post during the present Holy Year in 24 daily installments.

By Kees Van Hoek

Foreign Affairs Writer of the Irish Times

Chapter III—Gasparri's Pupil

ON EASTER Sunday, 1899, after having been ordained priest by the Patriarch of Antioch the day before, Eugenio Pacelli said his first mass in a side chapel of the great basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore. The memento picture which he gave to friends and relations present begins: "Eugenio Pacelli Romanus"—the Roman. His typical features, the high, clear forehead and the classical round eyebrows in the perfect oval of his face, shone with emotion.

To have become a priest, for which he was destined by birth, and been trained by choice, his faith was a synthesis of knowledge and sentiment. His fondest wish was to become a curate. But destiny willed otherwise.

One day when he was at home playing his beloved violin to his sister's piano accompaniment, a caller was announced—Monsignor Gasparri, the Secretary of the Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, the first department of the Papal Secretariat of State.

The young aristocrat respectfully kissed the sturdy peasant hand of his high visitor. Pietro Gasparri, later the Cardinal-Secretary of State of two Popes, was a giant in stature. He came from a mountain village in the Abruzzi, and with his relations, simple peasants, he chatted of local births and deaths, harvest and sheep-shearing.

Hoped for a Parish

HIS WAY was to take the bull by the horns, and he had set his mind on getting this brilliant young priest in his office. Pacelli demurred: he had hoped for a parish. But Gasparri boomed his loud laugh:

"So you want to become a shepherd, but I want you to be come a sheep-dog to shy away the wolves," and as Gasparri had a way of winning the day, Pacelli became first an apprendista, or junior clerk, soon a minutante, or principal copyist in Gasparri's department.

That was in 1901. Leo XIII was still on the papal throne, and that grand seigneur, Cardinal Rampolla del Tindaro, was his Secretary of State. Forty picked clerics were employed in this most important Vatican State Office, housed on the top floor of the Vatican palace, whence the development of ecclesiastical affairs in all countries of the world was closely watched. Going through all ranks, Pacelli quickly reached the undersecretaryship. Such was his reputation that once, when there was a deadlock in some delicate negotiations between the French government and the Holy See, Gasparri finally said to the French Ambassador, Hanotaux:

"This must be cleared up, I'll send you my best man, young Pacelli"; who promptly disentangled what seemed to have become a Gordian knot.

Scholar and Orator

HE WAS not only a brilliant scholar, but an eloquent orator, and as such was chosen for another important task, that of professor in ecclesiastical diplomacy and international law at the Academy of Noble Ecclesiastics, the papal diplomatic training school.

Even more onerous was a further collaboration to which Gasparri, his untiring mentor, chose him, that of Secretary of the Commission for the Codification of Canon Law. This was a monumental task, but with the doggedness of a mountaineer, Gasparri had set his teeth in it, though he knew that it would take him all his life, if God spared him. The Law of the Church was spread over numerous edicts and Bulls. Gasparri went to work to collect and coordinate them with characteristic thoroughness.

He began by founding his own printing works, so that he could supervise it properly. When he had finished collecting all the material, he had it sent out to each of the 1200 bishops of the Catholic community over the world, with instructions that every bishop was to consult with three local lawyers, all sworn to secrecy. Thus some 5000 persons collaborated in the codification.

Gasparri used to absent himself from the Vatican one day a week, the only break, but a regular one, in his iron routine of incessant work. Then he galloped around the countryside, inspected with the eye of an expert a little property he had outside the city gates, which his brother ran for him, and was farmer again, showing a new hand how to drive a plough. To thin and pale Pacelli he counseled a good daily walk: "We talk so much of heaven that a bit of earth underneath our feet will do us good." Pacelli obeyed.

His Recreation Music

EVEN ON the day before his election as Pope, he could be seen taking his stroll on the Pincio Hill overlooking Rome. His favorite recreation, however, was music, his violin; he had the sense of melody born with him, hence the melodious music of his eloquence.

On Sundays he went to private chamber music concerts in patrician houses, where he was a welcome guest; very tall, very pale, his dreaming dark eyes underneath thick black curls, made him an apparition which one did not soon forget.

London got to know him as early as 1901 when he was the bearer of a handwritten letter of condolence from Pope Leo XIII to King Edward VII, on the death of Queen Victoria. Seven years later, a monsignore then, he stayed with the Duke of Norfolk at St. James' Square during the London Eucharistic Congress. He must be the only Pope with a British decoration—once Pope they accept none—for in 1911 he attended the coronation of King George V in the suite of the Papal Envoy, Archbishop Granito Pigenatelli di Belmonte.

But his preference continued to go out to a simple curate's work; he heard confessions in the little church where he served mass in his youth, gave Sunday school lessons, and preached occasionally, fine orations, over the preparation of which he took infinite pains.

Churchill's Son Named In Sofia 'Spy' Trial

Frankfurt, Germany, March 20 (U.P.)—The Bulgarian News Agency reported tonight that 25 Bulgarian and Yugoslav citizens had gone on trial in Sofia on charges of being members of a spy ring allegedly organized by Randolph Churchill, son of Winston Churchill.

The indictment said the defendants spied for Yugoslavia and their operations dated back to 1944, the agency reported.

Robin Hood

Perhaps it is a legend and . . . Perhaps the tale is true . . . But Robin Hood could bend a bow . . . As few could ever do . . . And he was one who robbed the rich . . . And gave it to the poor . . . That life might be more equal and . . . More easy to endure . . . His method was illegal and . . . He cut a bloody path . . . However much he may have thought . . . He had a righteous wrath . . . But would it not be wonderful . . . If each of us could be . . . A kind of gallant Robin Hood . . . For our community? . . . I mean, if we would share our goods . . . Sufficiently to give . . . At least the bare necessities . . . Our neighbors need to live?

The DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

As They Say on the Air: 'Now for the Snooze'

As Mrs. Granville Klink of 713 Spring st., Silver Spring, Md., she's the wife of WTOP's engineer "Big Klink," the guy with the big grin.

But as Marion R. Black (her maiden name) she writes poetry and songs and suchlike. Her "Little Guy" was a Columbia Records release last year.

Currently, Marion offers her fellow District Liners:

At 6 a. m. on Sunday morn,
When slumber could be sweet
The one thing we can't bear to hear
Is the patter of little feet.

NEAR MISS

The cashier at the New York ave. Howard Johnson restaurant put her hand over the telephone mouthpiece and called out:

As the bus boy made his way up front to the phone, we pictured the caller's joy at being informed that the diamond had been found. And then we contemplated what must have been her dismay when the young man took the phone and said:

"I've got your dime. I found it on the floor."

SOMETHING FOR NOTHING

M. B. Schnapper, editor of Public Affairs Press, has whipped up a useful map which he intends to distribute in connection with the Sesquicentennial.

The map not only shows a major portion of the District, but pinpoints such places of interest as hotels, public buildings, memorials, museums, parks and other spots in which a sightseer wou'd be interested. And the back of the map contains a calendar of Sesqui events.

Schnapper says that readers of the District Line may obtain free advance copies of the map by calling his office (North 9063) or by writing the Public Affairs Press at 2153 Florida ave. nw., Washington 8, D. C.

MAIL BAG

Dear Bill:

The other day a Washington Post headline said, "None of the Victims Is From D. C." Shouldn't it have been "None . . . Are"?

Windsor Thompson,

Dear Windsor:

Quit trying to expose my ignorance.

My Webster says that, "as subject, 'none' with a plural verb is the commoner construction." This would appear to permit the singular verb, while not exactly sanctioning it.

If we substitute for the word "none" some expression such as: "not a one," "not one," or "not a single one," then the singular verb is unquestionably more appropriate. What happens when we shorten these expressions to "none" I leave to Mr. Webster.

Besides, headline writers make up their own rules of grammar as they go along.

Bill.

CLUB NEWS

The March 10 meeting of the District Line Club was canceled because of the coal shortage. Next meeting will be Friday at 8 p. m., Petworth Library, Georgia ave. and Upshur st. nw.

PERSONAL NOTES

Mrs. John S. Kilner, jr., 210 Danbury rd., Bethesda, Md.: I don't think anybody would be interested in buying a book of reprints of "the best of the District Line," but the District Line Club seems to think so. Club members have asked for and been granted permission to reprint (all profits to Children's Hospital) and have chipped in a couple of hundred dollars to bankroll the project. They're now trying to gather and edit the necessary material from back columns. Join the club and they'll put you to work.

STREET SCENE

"Don't you know you're supposed to give a hand signal before pulling out of a parking place?" asked the officer. "Let me see your permit."

"Okay," he said. "Next time watch those signals."

The car drove off, but the policeman followed. Five minutes later, he again waved the motorist to the side of the road.

"Let me see your permit," he said. Without a word, the motorist complied. The man in blue looked at the little card in utter disbelief.

"You a wise guy or something?" he said. "This isn't the permit you showed me 5 minutes ago. That one expired at midnight—which is right now."

"I know," replied the motorist pleasantly. "I saw you look at your watch. But now that the old permit has expired, I'm showing you my new one. Anything wrong with that?"

It took a while, but a grin finally broke out on the cop's face. "You win," he said. "I thought I had you."

Czech Purge Denial Boomerangs

By Drew Pearson

One day last December, an American newsman walked up to a stocky, pipe-smoking diplomat in the delegates' lounge at the United Nations — Vladimir Clementis, foreign minister of Czechoslovakia.

Pearson

"Mr. Minister," said the newsman, "what's this I hear about a purge in the foreign office in Prague?"

"Ridiculous!"

"A purge which, they say, might even eliminate you."

"Absolutely ridiculous. Look here, why don't you fellows print something true about my country? Why don't you tell the story of our great advances in agriculture and industry, under the Communist regime, instead of printing silly rumors about purges!"

Clementis wouldn't call them silly rumors today. He has now been purged.

Note—Reason for the latest Czech purge probably was to pave the way for a complete taking-over of Czechoslovakia by Russia. Hitherto the country has been run by Czech Communists. But Poland is now under the dictatorship of a Russian general and this will probably follow in other satellite countries as a crackdown on growing unrest.

Taxation Humor

"Suppose a young man decides to propose," opined Congressman Bob Rich of Pennsylvania. "He has to pay a 20 percent tax on the engagement ring. Then another tax on the wedding ring. And suppose in due time they acquire an offspring.

"Then the taxes really start—20 percent on baby oil, baby powder, baby lotion and baby creams."

Mom and sis also had a defender in Representative Les Arends of Illinois. "And when the tax gougers made up their 'sucker' list," Arends said, "you ladies were placed at the top and you have been there ever since.

"These are not 'luxuries,'" continued Arends, referring to toilet articles and cosmetics. "The American way of life has made these articles as essential to you women as shaving to menfolks. The truth is that the Washington tax-masters regard you women as a 'soft touch.'"

Representative Edith Nourse Rogers of Massachusetts, not to be outdone, got in a plug for the menfolks. "From the time they get up in the morning, men pay a tax on everything," she said. "Their pajamas . . . their bath soap and shaving lotion . . . their razor and hair tonic . . . everything they eat for breakfast . . . and that all-important smoke."

Democrats seemed to enjoy the show as much as Republicans until GOP Representative Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania tearfully recited:

"No baby oil for you, young man,
By the rule of Uncle Sam
You're a luxury, little lamb.
The skin we loved to touch with powder
We sadly pat while you yell louder;
'So now you know, my little man,
Why mama votes Republican."

Byrd Battle

The Senate hasn't seen the end of the feud between Minnesota's breezy, young Senator Hubert Humphrey and Virginia's apple-cheeked Senator Harry Byrd. Humphrey is still trying to sprinkle salt on Byrd's tail.

The brash Minnesotan raided Byrd's favorite nest, the Senate Economy Committee, with a charge that instead of saving money it was wasting money. He pointed out that the committee hadn't even met for two years.

This brought the Byrd forces to the Senate floor in full array. More Republicans and Dixiecrats turned out to defend Byrd than listened to the debate on the Marshall Plan and Atlantic Pact. One by one they lambasted Humphrey, who couldn't get a word in edgewise. When he finally gained the floor, the Byrd forces drifted out, left him to talk to a near-empty chamber.

Bouncing Senator Ken Wherry of Nebraska, the Republican leader, actually hustled among the Republicans, urging them to leave Humphrey stranded. "This guy has given us a rough time," Wherry whispered. "Now let's give him a rough time."

So, many Republicans joined Southern Democrats in trailing out of the Senate chamber.

Stung by this insult, Humphrey lashed back at Byrd with facts instead of oratory. He also offered to meet Byrd any time in open debate, even sent several radio interviewers to try to arrange it. So far, Byrd has not accepted the challenge.

Note—What also burned up Humphrey was the way Administration Democrats left him to battle Byrd's friends singlehanded. Afterward, Humphrey called the White House and complained bitterly: "Every time I have been to the White House, President Truman has spent part of the time telling me what a menace Byrd is to a liberal government. But where were my Democratic friends when I took on Byrd?"

Power Lobby Picks

The potent oil lobby and the electric power interests are now planning their politics several years ahead. When a Senator opposes them, they begin grooming opposition for him, and in one case—North Dakota—have already picked a candidate.

He is North Dakota's Gov. Fred Aandahl, who will run against Senator Bill Langer in 1952.

The oil crowd is sore at Langer because of his outspoken opposition to State ownership of tidelands oil. Langer even hired a lawyer to fight the oil companies, sent a letter to President Truman praising him for vetoing the tidelands oil bill.

Governor Aandahl, on the other hand, came out in favor of giving tidelands oil to the States which in the past have leased it chiefly to the big oil companies.

Langer and Aandahl are also on opposite sides of the fence on the power issue, Aandahl going along with the power companies against public power and the Missouri Valley Authority.
